SUTTON-ON-THE-HILL.

This parish comprises the township of its own name, Ash, and Osliston-with-Thurvaston, in the hundred of Appletree, petty sessional and county council division of Sudbury, county court district of Derby, Burton-on-Trent union, rural district of Repton, and deanery of Longford.

The township which gives its name to the parish embraces 900 acres, belonging chiefly to the governors of Chetham Hospital, Manchester, who are lords of the manor, and the Rev. R. G. Buckston, M.A. The ratable value is £1,734, and the population in 1891 was 122. For purposes of the Local Government Act, Ash has been added to Sutton-on-the-Hill, and the united parish elects one district councillor. The land is chiefly in pasture. A cheese factory was erected by the governors of Chetham Hospital, and opened in May, 1875. It is furnished with the most improved appliances, and is capable of working up the produce of 500 cows. The milk is purchased from the neighbouring farmers.

This estate forms part of the endowment of the Hospital or Bluecoat School founded by Humphry Chetham, in Manchester, and was purchased for that purpose, as directed by the benevolent founder's will.

The village occupies an elevated position, whence its name, eight miles W. from Derby and three miles from Etwall station, on the North Staffordshire railway. The church, dedicated to St. Michael, is a good stone structure, situated on an eminence, and is a conspicuous object in the landscape for miles around. It was rebuilt in 1863, and consists of chancel, with vestry and organ chamber on the north side, nave, north aisle, south porch, and west tower surmounted by an octagonal spire. A few portions of the old building were retained. The four pointed arches of the north aisle belonged to that edifice, and date from the 14th century. The tower is Early English, but the spire which crowns it, having been struck by lightning on the 19th of June, 1841, was taken down and rebuilt at a cost of £84. When the chancel arch was taken down, in 1863, 13 silver coins of the reign of Henry III. (1216-1272) were found in a stone. The east window is a memorial of the Rev. German Buckston, vicar of this parish, and the two windows on the south side of the chancel are filled with stained glass in memory of Ellen Margaret Buckston, his widow. There are several monuments in the chancel to the Sleigh family, former lords of Ashe. One is a costly sarcophagus monument of alabaster, to the memory of Judith Sleigh, who died in 1634, and is said to be the only one of the kind in England. The reredos, pulpit, and desk are all of alabaster. The brass lectern was the gift of Mrs. Curzon. There are six bells in the tower, three having been recently added, two by Miss Dakin and one by the vicar. The church was appropriated at an early period to Trentham Priory, and it remained with that convent till the Reformation. The rectorial tithes and advowson then passed to the Crown, and were purchased by the Sleighs in 1603. From the latter they have descended through the Chethams and Cottons to the Buckstons. The living is worth £160 per annum; present vicar and patron, the Rev. Rowland German Buckston, M.A. (Brasenose College, Oxon). The registers date from 1565. The book of churchwardens' accounts contains some rather amusing entries. On July 1, 1754, Samuel Lygo was appointed to whip dogs out of the church whenever service was held; also to prevent anyone sleeping in the church, by waking them with a white wand. His remuneration for this work was five shillings a year.

A new vicarage house was built in 1894, by the trustees of Queen Anne's Bounty; and in 1873 the Governors of Chetham Hospital gave the land for the erection of the present school, which superseded the old endowed school, built in 1735. The Feast is held on the first Sunday after October 11th (Old Michaelmas Day.)

ASH is a small township containing 692½ acres of land, belonging solely to the Rev. R. G. Buckston, and valued for rating purposes at £1,349. There is no village; the inhabitants, 73 in number, live in scattered houses. The Ashe is a large mansion of brick, with stone dressings, erected in 1869-70, and situated in its own grounds, which are tastefully laid out in shrubberies, &c. This township is in the southern parliamentary division, and is united with Sutton-on-the-Hill for the election of a district councillor.

OSLISTON AND THURVASTON form a joint township, containing 1,685 acres of land, owned by Miss Bradshaw; Mr. Frank Stretton, Cropper Top; Chetham Hospital, Manchester; Mr. Thomas Holmes, Brailsford; John Brassington, Sutton-on-the-Hill; Stephen Bagshaw, Derby; and Daniel Shaw, Cropper Farm. The total ratable value is £2,999, and the population 293. Osliston and Thurvaston are two small villages about half-a-mile apart. In Domesday Book they are entered as distinct manors, Oswardestune and Torverdestune; the former was held by one John, under Henry de Ferrers, and the latter by Elfin. In the reign of Henry II., another John, who appears to have held both places, and is supposed to have been the ancestor of the Montgomeries, gave half the tithes of his demesne here to Tutbury Priory. From the Montgomeries the two manors passed to the Vernons. Cropper is a hamlet one mile S. of Thurvaston. Cropper Top is the residence and property of Frank Stretton, Esq.

Long Lane is a small village near Thurvaston, which gives name to an ecclesiastical district formed, about thirty years ago, out of the parishes of Sutton-on-the-Hill, Brailsford, and Trusley. (See Trusley.)

TADDINGTON.

This parish comprises the townships of Taddington and Priestcliffe, Blackwell, and Brushfield, containing 4,711 acres of land, and 431 inhabitants. It is in the hundred of High Peak, electoral division of Tideswell, petty sessional division, county court district, and union and rural district of Bakewell, and deanery of Buxton.

The township of Taddington embraces 3,012 acres, ratable value £5,397, and population 363. The land is owned by the following proprietors:—N. Flint, Buxton; Youlgrave Friendly Society; Lord Denman, Stoney Middleton; Trustees of Tideswell Grammar School; Joseph Potter, Ashbourne; Miss Swann, Buxton; Exors. of William Finney; Joseph Gyte, Wheston; Taddington Oddfellows' Society; Richard Dunn, Priestcliffe; Francis Dunn, Flagg; Thomas Dakin, Millers Dale; Rev. and Hon. Lord Scarsdale, Kedleston; H. P. Bagshaw, Esq., Taddington; John Cookson, Salford; Exors. of William Brown; Thomas Roberts, Newcastle-on-Tyne; Exors. of Thomas Lingard; Vicar of Bakewell; James Shufflebottom, Wincle, near Macclesfield; Rev. James Howard Redfern, Battersea Park; Isaac B. Needham, Buxton; John Heathcote, Brushfield; William Bloore, Brushfield; John Bateman Bagshaw, Esq., Highlow Hall, Hathersage; Rev. John Edward Andrew, Derwent Vicarage; G. Melland May, Esq.; C. S. Leslie, Esq., Hassop; and John James Lees, Buxton.

At the time of the Domesday Survey, Tadintune (Taddington) was a berewick of the Royal manor of Ashford. William de Hamilton died, seized of a third part of the manor of Taddington, in 1286, and in the following century, the Cotterell family held this manor and several adjacent estates. It has long been considered as parcel of the manor of High Peak, of which the Duke of Devonshire is lessee from the Duchy of Lancaster.

The surface rises into bold eminences and rugged dreary moorlands. A considerable extent was formerly common, but by powers of an Act obtained in 1792, about 1,600 acres were inclosed. The soil is encumbent on limestone; the latter is extensively worked by the Buxton Lime Company. Veins of lead occur amongst the hills, and mining operations were carried on at Hubberdale, Bull Torr, and Moorhigh, but this industry has been abandoned.

The village of Taddington is situated on the Bakewell and Buxton road, at a considerable elevation, four miles S. from Tideswell, and two miles from Millers Dale station, on the Midland railway. The church, which is dedicated to St. Michael, is a large and interesting structure, chiefly in the later Decorated Gothic style of the 14th century. During the late restoration a stone was found on the roof of the porch bearing the date 1416, which probably indicates the year when the church was rebuilt. An earlier chapel occupied the site, but no remains of that building are to be seen in the present edifice. Taddington was then a chapelry in the extensive parish of Bakewell, and remained as such till a recent Act constituted it a vicarage. It was given with the Mother Church by King John to the Dean and Chapter of Lichfield, who thus became the owners of the great tithes. In 1280, John Peckham, Archbishop of Canterbury, made his metropolitan visitation, and fixed the chaplain's stipend at five marks a year, to be contributed in equal portions by the Chapter and the inhabitants of Taddington. Shortly afterwards the Chapter obtained more favourable terms, and shifted nearly the whole burden on to the shoulders of the parishioners.

The present church consists of chancel, nave with north and south aisles, south porch and western tower surmounted by a spire, containing four bells. The nave was restored, in 1847, at an expense of £350, raised by rate and subscription, but the repair of the dilapidated chancel was left for the Dean and Chapter of Lichfield, the owners of the great tithes. A law suit followed to determine whether that responsibility rested with the Chapter or with the Duke of Rutland, their lessee. Ultimately the Dean and Chapter refused to bear any longer the expenses of the law suit, or undertake the repairs of the chancel, as they had been distinctly released from such burden by the ordinance of Archbishop Peckham, wherein it was decided that the inhabitants of the respective chapelries were bound to repair both the nave and the chancel in their several chapels in the parish of Bakewell. The inhabitants reluctantly consented to undertake the liability of all future repairs. The tower was taken down and rebuilt about 26 years ago in exact imitation of the old one, the old material being re-used.

The fabric, tower excepted, was thoroughly restored in 1892 at a cost of £2,000, of which £1,000 was given by the Rev. R. S. Hunt, M.A., of Markbeach, Kent, canon of Canterbury Cathedral, and a former incumbent of Taddington. The porch was rebuilt on the old lines, at the expense of Miss Hunt. A new roof has been placed upon the nave, but the old beams have been retained. The floor has been lowered to its original level, and the bases of the pillars once more exposed to view. The plaster and whitewash have been scraped off and the walls and pillars well cleaned and pointed. The gallery, which disfigured the west end, has been taken down and the fine old tower arch opened out. On the west wall is a mural painting, which was brought to light at the late restoration. The east window is a handsome decorated one of five lights; there are two windows on the south side of the chancel and a priest's door, and one window on the north side. On each side of the east window is a carved stone bracket that formerly supported a statue, and another bracket may be seen in the north wall. Here, too, about four feet above the altar steps, is a projecting stone reading slab, on which the altar book rested whilst the deacon chanted or intoned the gospel of the day. The ancient sedilia has been completely restored and once more appropriated to its original purpose, and near it is the piscina niche. There was under this, raised 12 inches above the floor, a stone slab, without inscription or ornament, which Dr. Cox describes as a gravestone, but ecclesiastical architects believe it to be the original altar stone, and at the late restoration it was taken up and placed under the communion table.

The aisles are separated from the nave on each side by four arches supported by slender octagonal pillars. The east end of the south aisle, called the "Black-wall Quire," was formerly a chapel, and the piscina still remains. There is also here, as well as at the east end of the north aisle, a stone bracket for the support of a statue. This was the early burial place of the Blackwalls, and an ancient table monument of the family still remains. On the alabaster slab are brasses, on which are engraven the effigies of a man and woman and four coats of arms, two at the head and two at the feet. The figures represent Richard Blackwall, of Blackwell, and Agnes, his wife. The former died in 1505. At the east end of the north aisle are memorials of the Wilkinson family. The font stands near the south porch. It is octagonal in shape, and tapers from the top and bottom towards the middle like an hour-glass. It is lined with lead, and is evidently of considerable antiquity. In the churchyard stands the shaft of a cross about 6ft. high. The ornamentation, which is very faint, appears to consist of zig-zag lines and diamond-shaped figures. This cross, in the opinion of Dr. Cox, is a relic of Ancient British or Celtic Christianity.

The living is in the gift of the vicar of Bakewell, and held by the Rev. J. Bateson, B.A., since 1865. The original stipend of the curate was five marks. The Parliamentary Commissioners, in 1650, state that "to the chappell of Taddington there is no certain Meanes but the gratuity of the people." The living was augmented with £800 from Queen Anne's Bounty and £800 Parliamentary grant. The tithes of lamb and wool, valued at £28, were transferred to the living by the Dean and Chapter of Lichfield in 1889, and the great tithes, commuted value £85, were given by the Duke of Rutland in 1890, which virtually constitutes Taddington a rectory.

A school was erected in the village in 1804, by Alice and Martha White, in pursuance of the will of Michael White, their brother, and endowed with £15 a year for the free education of twelve poor children. The endowment was augmented in 1887 by a legacy of £1,000, left by the late Mr. Brunt, of Lewisham, Kent.

Priestcliffe is a hamlet forming a joint township with Taddington. A free school was founded here in 1714, by the Rev. Roger Wilkson, of Wormhill, and endowed with land for the free education of all the family of Wilkson that shall reside at Taddington, or in the parishes of Bakewell and Tideswell, and ten more poor children in Priestcliffe, Taddington, Blackwell, and Brushfield. He also directed that if any of the Wilksens be qualified for masters they be chosen before any others. New premises, with master's house, were erected in 1847. It is now under the Educational Department, and is attended by about 40 children.

There are several barrows or tumuli in the district, and on Five Wells Hill, about $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile west of Taddington, says Mr. Bateman, "is one of the most perfect examples now existing of the sepulchral architecture of the aboriginal inhabitants of Britain. It consists of two vaults, situated in the centre of a cairn about thirty yards in diameter, each approached by a separate gallery or avenue, formed by large limestones standing edgewise, extending through the tumulus, respectively, in a south-east and north-west direction."

Five parish councillors have been assigned to Taddington under the Local Government Act and one rural district councillor.

BLACKWELL township embraces 1,055 acres of land, belonging solely to the Duke of Devonshire, who is also lord of the manor. Its ratable value is £2,409, and the population in 1891 was 42. The township lies on the south bank of the river Wye, which can be here crossed by "lepping stones" opposite Blackwell Mill. A little further on the river runs between rocky cliffs, which have been tunnelled for the railway. William Peverel, in the reign of Henry I., gave his manor here, consisting of four oxgangs of land, to Lenton Priory, in Nottinghamshire. This estate was granted, in 1552, to Sir William Cavendish, who was greatly enriched out of the spoliation of monasteries. The Blackwalls also had a manor and residence here from a very early period. Sir William Blackwall was a zealous royalist, and was in consequence greatly impoverished in the Civil Wars. His liabilities, in the reign of Charles II., were estimated at the then enormous sum of £130,632 7s. 10d. The manor was seized and sold, or granted, to the family of Hope; but it now belongs to the Duke of Devonshire.

For purposes of local government, Blackwell has been united with Chelmorton. They elect conjointly one rural district councillor.

BRUSHFIELD is a small township consisting of five farms, situated on an eminence above Taddington Dale. The total extent is 644 acres; ratable value, £1,434; and population, 26. The Duke of Devonshire owns all the land except the mill dam, about two acres in extent, which belongs to Lord Scarsdale. There are some pleasing views from the higher grounds over Monsal Dale and Taddington Dale. The Midland railway passes through a small portion of the township, and Monsal Dale station is adjacent to it. The Ancient British inhabitants have left their traces behind in the several cairns or tumuli still to be seen in the district. Two querns or hand-mills were found here, and a barrow opened in 1825 contained an iron sword, measuring 32 inches in length and two in breadth, the iron umbo of a shield, and an iron knife and buckle, but this was evidently a much later interment.

The manor was at an early period divided into moieties, one of which was given by Robert, son of Walthoof, to the Abbey of Rufford, and the other was successively held by the Montjoys and the Blounts. On the dissolution of Rufford Abbey, Henry VIII. granted that moiety to George, Earl of Shrewsbury. In 1628 it passed by the marriage of a coheiress to Sir William Armine; it was subsequently sold to the Bradshaws, from whom it was purchased by the Earl of Devonshire, who now owns the whole manor.

CHARITIES.—William Higginbottom and Ellen, his wife, left 10s. a year to the poor of the Liberty of Taddington; and Charles Hayward, in 1773, left 5s. yearly for ever to be distributed in bread. Rev. Roger Wilkson, in addition to the school which he founded, left two rent-charges, amounting to 12d. weekly, to be distributed in white bread every Lord's Day for ever. The sum of £5 10s., received from Gisborne's charity, is distributed in flannel and coarse cloth.

TANSLEY.

This is a parish and township, in the hundred, petty sessional division, and county court district of Wirksworth; county council division of Matlock; union, rural district, and deanery of Bakewell. The parish council consists of six members, and the parish also elects one district councillor.

The total area, according to the Diocesan Calendar, is 1,788 acres; there are 1,108 acres under assessment, the ratable value of which is £1,989. The population in 1891 was 767. The Duke of Portland is lord of the manor; and the Rev. Chas. Wooley-Dod, Charles Childers Radford, Esq., J.P., and the trustees of Unwin Heathcote, Esq., are the principal landowners. The soil is of excellent quality, and a considerable portion of it is occupied by nurseries, where forest trees, and shrubs both native and exotic, ash, larch, oak, and ornamental rhododendrons are extensively grown from the seed. Gritstone is abundant and extensively quarried, and coal has been found on Tansley Moor.

Tansley (Taneslege in Domesday Book) was, at the time of the Norman Survey, a berewick of the royal manor of Metesforde (Matlock). It was afterwards granted to the Knights Templars, and on the suppression of that order it was transferred to the Hospitallers, who retained it till the dissolution of the religious orders at the Reformation. Subsequently it was granted to George or Francis, Earl of Shrewsbury; and passed by the marriage of one of the coheirresses of Gilbert, 7th Earl, to William, Earl of Pembroke, who sold it to the Earl of Newcastle, from whom it has descended to the Duke of Portland.

The village is situated on the edge of Tansley Moor, and about $1\frac{1}{2}$ miles E. from Matlock. It possesses a copious supply of excellent water and a bracing atmosphere, and these, together with its proximity to the beautiful scenery of our English Switzerland, make it a pleasant resort for visitors and invalids. A hydropathic establishment has been carried on here for some years under the direction of Mr. Wm. Mycock, who gained his experience under the modern founder of the mild water cure. The house is seated on an eminence overlooking Matlock, with Riber Castle in the distance. The internal arrangements are of a very superior character, and every improvement that experience can suggest has been adopted. Surrounding the house are tastefully-laid-out grounds, with tennis courts, croquet lawns, &c., for outdoor recreation. A cotton mill was erected here at an early period. The manufacture of tape is now carried on, on a most extensive scale, by Messrs. Lowe & Scholes, and the same firm has also a wide reputation for the manufacture of the choicest woollen shawls, which rival in beauty the far-famed productions of the East.

The church, dedicated to the Holy Trinity, was erected 1839-40, and a parochial district allotted to it. It is a neat structure of stone in the Gothic style, with a pinnaced tower at the west end. There are nearly 300 sittings, of which 148 are free. The living is now a rectory, worth £180 net, with a good residence, in the gift of the vicar of Crich, and held by the Rev. J. B. S. Mais. There are eight acres of glebe; the tithe rent-charge is £42.

The Wesleyan Methodists have a chapel here, with burial ground attached; and the members of the Methodist Free Church have also a place of worship in the village. The National School, with master's house, was erected in 1843, chiefly through the exertions of the late E. Radford, Esq., and the will of that gentleman endowed it with $6\frac{1}{2}$ acres of land in 1867.

On Tansley Moor there was recently dug up a pig of lead, bearing the following inscription in raised Roman characters:—"P. R. ABASCANTI METALLI LVTVDARES." Near the place where it was found is a narrow lane locally known as the "Roman road," but probably an old British trackway which was utilized by the Romans for the conveyance of lead from the mines.

THORPE.

This is a parish, township, and village, in the hundred of Wirksworth; electoral division of Hartington; petty sessional division, poor law union, county court district, and rural deanery of Ashbourne. Its estimated extent is 1,104 acres. About ten years ago 600 acres were taken from Thorpe and added to Newton Grange for all civil purposes; but the ecclesiastical boundary remains unchanged. The ratable value is £2,045, and the population, according to the census of 1891, is 198. Sir William Fitzherbert, Bart., Tissington Hall, is lord of the manor and principal owner. The following also own land in the parish:—R. W. Hanbury, Esq., M.P., Ilam Hall, Staffs.; W. B. Badnall, Esq., J.P.; Lord Denman; George Poyser; Robert Dale; and Thornton's Exors.

The parish lies on the east bank of the river Dove, which here flows through one of the most beautiful and picturesque dales in the kingdom, the far-famed Dovedale, whose praises have been sung by poets and its beauties limned by artists without number. The entrance to the dale is through a deep narrow ravine between two lofty eminences, Thorpe Cloud on the one side and Bunster Hill on the other. Picturesquely situated at the foot of the former is Dovedale Hotel, where tourists and pic-nic parties can obtain every accommodation at reasonable charges. On the Staffordshire side of the river, near Ilam, is another commodious establishment the Izaak Walton Hotel, much frequented by votaries of the rod and line, who can obtain fishing tickets here. Thorpe Cloud is a steep cone-shaped hill rising to a height of about 300 feet above the river which flows at its base, hissing and splashing amongst the rocks that impede its course. Here the Dove receives the waters of the Manifold river from the Staffordshire side. Mr Croston, who has described with facile pen his impressions of Dovedale in his work "On foot through the Peak," says:—"The entrance to Dovedale is an introduction quite in character with the marvels beyond, and the spectator becomes almost startled by the wild and savage grandeur of the prospect to which a few steps have so suddenly introduced him—so striking in contrast with the calm and placid beauty of the lovely valley through which it is approached. The green pastures, the sunny glades, the fair and fertile meadows, the rising slopes mantled with woods, the gentle flowing river, and the warm rich landscape, have hardly faded from the sight ere he finds himself in the midst of a scene where nature exhibits some of her most striking and majestic features, and where, instead of the sweet melodies of the birds, the bleating of flocks, and the gladsome hum of sunny music, he has to listen to the angry brawling of the tortuous stream, as it frets and chafes round the little islets, or dashes with impetuosity over the rocky barriers that here and there impede its course." There is no monotony, no satiety, constant change of scene meets the eye as we move along, at every step new beauties unfold themselves, and never pall upon the sight.

The first part of Dovedale is an open dell nearly half-a-mile in length, bounded by steep and rugged rocks intermixed with foliage and greenery, and below, the river flows murmuringly over its stony bed. A little further on the river suddenly bends, and an enchanting scene bursts upon the sight. The landscape suddenly assumes a wild and savage character. On both sides of the river rise huge masses of rock, single and in groups, assuming various fantastic forms, and sometimes projecting over as if they would fall on the head of the spectator. One of these beetling cliffs projects far out over the stream, and from its summit very fine views are obtained. It was in attempting to gain the summit of this precipice on horseback that the Dean of Clogher, Mr. Langton, lost his life, a century ago. A little further, on the Staffordshire side, is a curious assemblage of rocks, named Dovedale Church; and nearly opposite, on the Derbyshire side, is a group which has been christened "Tissington Spires" or the "Twelve Apostles." Further up the dale is a huge mass of bare rock, perforated near the top by a natural archway, which leads to an open space, and thence to "Reynard's Hall," a cavernous hollow in the side of the parent rock; and lower down is another cave of smaller dimensions, styled "Reynard's Kitchen." The ascent to these caves was formerly a labour of considerable difficulty; but ropes are now stretched down, and with their assistance the task is rendered comparatively easy. This is the wildest part of Dovedale, and full of savage grandeur. Giant fragments, rent from the parent rock by some irresistible force, lie scattered about, and

"Chasms of the early world are there,
And rocks are seen, craggy and vast and bare
And many a dizzy precipice sublime."

"A scene of more utter loneliness, or stern magnificence," says Mr. Croston, "it would be difficult to conceive; it is

'A solitude where nought of life is seen,
A silence that forbids all earthly sound,' and even the birds seem to shun a seclusion so mysterious and profound."

Ascending the dale the rocks on either side gradually approach each other, and at one spot barely leave foothold between the cliffs and the river. Only a few yards separate the opposite rocks, and the gorge is not inappropriately styled "Dovedale Straits," through which the river, when swollen, rushes and foams and roars. Beyond this rocky portal the character of the scenery changes—grassy slopes and wooded banks are again seen. Occasionally a rugged cliff appears, but the river flows placidly between its green banks, and a little further on are two curiously caverned openings, called "Dove Holes," high up in the face of rock, beyond which the scenery has no special attractions.

At the time of the Domesday Survey, the manor of Thorpe was in the possession of the Crown. It afterwards belonged to the Cockaynes, from whom it was purchased in the latter part of the reign of Elizabeth by John Milward, Esq., of Eaton Dovedale. After one descent the estate passed, by the marriage of an heiress, to Charles Adderley, Esq., from whose descendant it was purchased a few years ago by Sir William Fitz-Herbert, Bart.

The village of Thorpe is delightfully situated on the sloping ground at the foot of Thorpe Cloud, and near the entrance to Dovedale, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles N.N.W. from Ashbourne. The river is here crossed by a stone bridge leading to Ham, and lower down by another on the road to Blore. A Wellingtonia was planted on the green when Sir William Fitz-Herbert purchased the estate, and it has now attained large and graceful proportions. The Manor House opposite the green is occupied by Mr. William White, and The Old House is in the occupation of Mr. Goodwin Greensmith. The church, dedicated to St. Leonard, is a small edifice of stone, consisting of chancel, nave, south porch, and a fine western tower. The latter is in the Norman style of the 12th century, and is evidently the oldest part of the present structure; but it is probable that a church occupied the site at an earlier date. The archway between the tower and nave is a good specimen of substantial Norman work. The rest of the church is in late Gothic. Considerable repairs were effected in 1841, a gallery erected, and the interior re-pewed. The chancel was restored in 1881, and the nave in 1883 at a cost of £900, raised by subscription. The three sedilia and the piscina remain in the south wall of the chancel. The east window, recently filled with stained glass at the expense of Mr. and Mrs. Badnall, is a fine piece of work, by Powell, of London. The scenes depicted are the Agony in the Garden, the Crucifixion, and Our Lord appearing to Mary Magdalen. The chancel is furnished with oak stalls, the roof also is of oak, and the nave is seated with open benches to accommodate 120. The old Norman font, for some years used as a cattle trough, has been again placed in the church, but all the incised ornamentation it once bore has disappeared. There are few monuments of interest. In the north wall of the chancel is a tablet tomb of marble much mutilated, bearing a coat of arms, and the small sculptured figures of two men and two women. The inscription is obliterated, but was as follows:—"Here lieth the body of John Millward, Esq., who married Mary, daughter of Wm. Blount, Esq., who had issue two sons and two daughters; wh: John died 28th of Januy., 1632, his age 82." The figures on the monument are the two sons and two daughters. On the south wall is a slate tablet to the memory of the Rev. M. Winder, rector of this parish, who died in 1766. The tower, which is partly covered with ivy, contains three bells; one bears the legend, "Jesus be our spede," another is inscribed Campana "Beate Marie Virginis," and is evidently of pre-Reformation date; the third was cast in 1845. The registers commence in 1538. The living is a rectory, net value £115 with residence, in the gift of the Bishop of Southwell, and held by the Rev. Thomas Wilson Windley, M.A., St. John's Coll., Camb. The tithes were commuted for £95. There are 16 acres of glebe, six cowgates of pasture, and six sheepgates on Thorpe Cloud.

There is no school—the children attend Ilam, $1\frac{1}{2}$ miles distant. A Parish Room, used also as a library, reading-room, and Sunday School, was built in 1887.

Broadlow Ash, or Bradley Ash, is a large farm on elevated ground, belonging to R. W. Hanbury, Esq., M.P., Ilam Hall. It is mentioned in Domesday Book as a berewick or hamlet of Ashbourne, and was then a royal demesne. It was afterwards held by the Cockaynes. George Beresford held lands here in the reign of Henry VIII. In 1608 it was granted in exchange to the Earl of Salisbury, who sold it in 1613 to Dame Judith Corbet, by whose bequest it passed to her grandson, Sir William Boothby, created a baronet in 1660. It was for some time the chief seat of the Boothby family. The estate was sold in 1754, and has since passed through various hands. The Boothby mansion was taken down in 1795. Wm. Milward, Esq., whose tomb has been mentioned above, had lands at Bradley Ash on which he resided.

Thorpe is in the Ashbourne rural district, and sends one member to the district council.

TIDESWELL.

This parish comprises the townships of Tideswell, Litton, Wardlow, with part of Millers Dale, containing in all 6,607 acres, and 2,948 inhabitants. It is in the High Peak hundred; petty sessional division, county court district, and union of Bakewell; and deanery of Buxton. It gives name to a division for the election of a county councillor. Under the Local Government Act of 1894, seven members constitute the parish council, and Tideswell-with-Wheston elects two councillors to Bakewell rural district council.

The township of Tideswell embraces an area of 3,044 acres of land, chiefly limestone; the total ratable value £4,836, and the population, in 1891, was 1,936. The Duke of Devonshire is lord of the manor, and the following are the land-owners in addition to his Grace:—Thomas Shaw Ashton; George Barnesley, Peak Forest; William Wood Brown; Mrs. Jane Howe, Tideswell; Exors. of Joseph Wylds; Exors. of Robert Bingham; Jon. F. Ashton; Benjamin Frith, Tideswell; Exors. of John Moules; Thomas Sanderson Furness; Mrs. Esplin; T. W. Turner, Tideswell; Thomas Dakin; George Dakin; Samuel Furness, Stoney Middleton; Exors. of William Elliott; Thomas Gilbert, Tideswell; Hannah Gilbert; James Jennison; George Chadwick; Robert Hill Hydes; Robert Longdon; R. J. Robinson, Ashbourne; Exors. of Mary Bennett, and Denis Wilson.

At the time of the Domesday Survey, Tideswell was a berewick of the royal manor of Hope. King John gave the manor of Tideswell to Thomas Armiger in 1208; it afterwards passed, by female descent, to the Bamptons, and thence to the Daniels in the reign of Edward I. From the latter it was conveyed, by three coheiresses, to the families of Meverell, Marchinton, and Turvill. There is considerable perplexity about the descent of the manor. Sir Nicholas Stafford and Elizabeth, his wife, appear to have held it in the reign of Richard II. on an annual payment of £17. Their tenure was probably only a life one, as it again came into the possession of the Meverells, and remained with this family till the death of Robert Meverell, in 1626. His daughter and heiress, Elizabeth, married Thomas Lord Cromwell. In 1654, Winfield Lord Cromwell sold it to Robert Eyre, Esq., of Highlow; William Eyre, his grandson, took the name of Archer, and was the father of John Archer, Esq., who died in 1800. Under a decree of Chancery, in 1802, it was purchased by the Duke of Devonshire.

A market was granted at Tideswell, together with a fair, for two days, at the festival of the Decollation of St. John the Baptist; and these were confirmed to Richard Stafford about the year 1391, and to Sampson Meverell in 1432. The market still continues to be held on Wednesdays, and fairs on March 24th, May 15th, the last Wednesday in July, the second Wednesday in September, and the 29th of October. The town is small and irregularly built, and stands in the midst of a wild and sterile district, seven miles N.W. from Bakewell, seven miles E. by N. from Buxton, 17 from Sheffield, and $2\frac{1}{2}$ from Millers Dale station, on the Midland railway. All around are bleak and barren hills, and the aspect of the town itself is equally cold and cheerless. A clear rivulet flows along the main thoroughfare, along each side of which are scattered shops and houses. It is however a place of undoubted antiquity, and was, probably, in times gone by, of much greater importance than now. Calicoes and Oxford shirtings are manufactured here, and there are a few hand-loom engaged in weaving silk handkerchiefs. Many of the inhabitants are employed in the neighbouring quarries and in agriculture. The only object of interest in the place is its exceedingly handsome church which, from its magnitude and architectural beauty, has been styled the "Cathedral of the Peak." Tideswell was originally a chapelry under Hope, but became ecclesiastically independent about the middle of the 13th century. The present church, which superseded a Norman one, is dedicated to St. John the Baptist, and was erected about the middle of the 14th century, when the Decorated Gothic style had attained its most ornate and perfect stage. It is a large cruciform edifice, consisting of a very spacious chancel, nave, side aisles, north and south transepts, large south porch, and a west tower containing a clock and six bells. Its total length is 145 feet, width across the aisles 56 feet, and each transept extends 16 feet beyond the aisles. The fabric was long neglected, and what repairs were done were effected with a cheese-pairing policy and an utter want of appreciation of the beauty of the edifice which Catholic piety had erected for the worship of God. Happily better feelings now prevail, and, under the present vicar, the church has been restored in a great measure to its original beauty. About £3,000 has been expended on the restoration of the chancel. It has been very effectively roofed, the mutilated oak screen has been restored, the floor paved with Hopton stone and Ashford black marble, and the east window of five lights filled with stained glass, representing the genealogy of Christ and the history of John the Baptist. The cost of the latter was defrayed by C. G. S. Foljambe, Esq., now Lord Hawkesbury, whose early ancestors were buried in this part of the church. The chancel has been fitted with new oak stall, elaborately and exquisitely carved, and the old stalls have been transferred to the lady chapel. A noticeable feature of the chancel is the old stone reredos which stands out about six feet from the east wall. On each side is a niche with an elaborate canopy, surmounted by crocketed pinnacles. There is also a niche on each side of the east window. The three sedilia in the south wall are of very handsome design, and the piscina is also worthy of observation. The transepts were originally subsidiary chapels; the south transept had two altars, and there were probably also two in the opposite transept though there are only remaining indications of one. The north transept was the Lady Chapel, and here was a chantry founded by John Foljambe and endowed with about 200 acres of land for the maintenance of two priests. Connected with it was the Guild of Blessed Mary of Tideswell, an association of masters and workers banded together under the control of their ecclesiastical superiors for the protection of trade and their individual rights. These guilds had their laws and regulations, drawn up in a spirit of fairness and justice between master and man, and especially binding and stringent upon those whose selfish proclivities might lead them into antagonism with the common weal. They were, in a word, a combination of trades union and sick society, the regulations of which also enforced the observance of their religious duties. The transept chapels were divided from each other, and from the nave and aisles by elaborately carved screenwork, which remained until the repewing of the church in 1825 when, it is said, cartloads of it were removed. Some of this old carving has been recovered, and a new screen of the same pattern has been erected in the Guild Chapel or Organ Chamber. The carving is the work of Mr. Hunstone. The windows of the transepts are remarkably handsome, and, in the restoration, both of these and throughout the church the beautiful old tracery has been re-inserted, or where this was not possible the new work is a faithful reproduction.

The porch is spacious, and has a parvise or chamber above it, the occupant of which could watch the chancel through a squint. The tower appears to have been erected towards the end of the 14th century, and partakes somewhat of the Perpendicular style. It is an elaborate piece of work, but its beauty is lost by too much crowding. It is surmounted by a battlemented parapet, and from each corner rises an octagonal turret, with battlements and a crocketed spire; and between each of these corner turrets is another, somewhat similar in design but of less elevation and lighter in construction.

There are many ancient and interesting monuments in the church. The chancel was the burial place of the Foljambes, who were settled in this parish soon after the Conquest. Only one of their memorials now remains, that of John Foljambe, who died in 1358. This monument was restored by C. G. S. Foljambe, Esq., in 1875. In the centre of the chancel is a large table monument to Sampson Meyerell, who served under the Duke of Bedford, in France, and received the honour of knighthood at St. Luce. He died in 1462. The upper slab of Purbeck marble, bearing several inlaid brasses and shields, rests on open tracery work of alabaster, and through the openings is seen the effigy of an emaciated corpse wrapped in a winding sheet carved in stone. At the head are represented the good and bad angel struggling for his soul. This tomb also has been restored. On the floor is a very fine brass to the memory of Bishop Pursglove, on which is engraved the effigy of the bishop in episcopal vestments, with pastoral staff. At the foot of the figure is the following inscription:—

" Under this stone, as here doth ly, a corps sumtime of fame,
In Tiddeswell bred and born truely, Robert Pursglove by name;
And there brought up by parents care, at schole and learning trad,
Till afterwards by uncle dear to London he was had,
Who William Bradshaw hight by name, in Paul's wech did him place,
And yr at schole did him maintain full thrice 3 whole years space,
And then into the Abbeeye was placed as I wisse
In Southwark call'd, where it doth ly, St. Mary Overis.
To Oxford then who did him send into that colledge right,
And there 14 years did him find wh^{ch} Corpus Christi hight.
From thence at length away he went, a clerke of learning great,
To Gisburn Abbey streight was sent and plac'd in Prior's seat.
Bishop of Hull he was also, Archdeacon of Nottingham, Provost of Rotherham Colledge too, of York eak suffragan.
Two Gramer schools he did ordain with land for to endure;
One hospital for to maintain twelve impotent and poor.
O, Gisburne, then with Tiddeswell town lement & mourn you may,
For this said clerk of great renown lyeth here compact in clay.
Though cruel death hath down brought this body we here doth ly,
Yet trump of fame stay can he nought to sound his praise on high.
Qui legis hunc versum crebro reliquum meminervis
Vile cadaver sum, tuque cadaver eris."

Round the slab are the following lines:—

" Crist is to me, as life on earth, and death to me is gaine,
Because I trust through him alone, salvation to obtain.
So brittle is the state of man so soon it doth decay,
So all the glory of this world must pass and fade away.

This Robert Pursglove, sometyme Bishoppe of Hull, deceased the 2 day of Maii, the year of our Lord God 1579."

Pursglove was the last Prior of Gisborough, and after the dissolution of the monastery he received the handsome pension of £166 13s. 4d., partly as a solatium for the loss of the priory, but chiefly as a reward for his services as a commissioner in the enquiries into other monastic establishments. He was consecrated Suffragan Bishop of Hull in 1552, as a Reformer; but he does not appear to have imbibed the doctrines of the Reformation. In the following year Mary became Queen, and Pursglove returned to his first love, the old faith, and showed himself a vehement Papist. When the Reformed religion was re-established under Elizabeth, he refused to take the oath of supremacy to the Queen, and was deprived of his spiritualities. He then retired to Tideswell, where he passed the remainder of his days. His chief claim to remembrance is the two grammar schools which he founded at Tideswell and Guisborough.

There are also in the chancel memorial tablets of the Freeman, Charlton, Eccles, Downes, Eley, and Haigh families; and of the Rev. Thomas Brown, 40 years vicar of the parish.

In the south transept are the effigies of Sir Thurstan de Bower and Margaret, his wife. This tomb, together with the whole of the De Bower chapel, was restored in 1873 by J. Bower Brown, Esq., J.P., of Woodthorpe Hall, near Sheffield, a descendant of the Knight, at a cost of £2,500. The beautiful south window has been filled with stained glass, and the floor laid with Derbyshire marble. This transept was also the burial place of the Lyttons, and one memorial of the family remains—a slab in the floor bearing well preserved brasses of Sir Robert and Lady Isabella Lytton, who died, the former in 1483 and the latter in 1458. There were formerly two shields on the slab, but they disappeared many years ago. On the south wall is the monument of Thomas Statham, "who raised a troop of horse at his own charge for the Royal King Charles I., and was afterwards a patient sufferer of the tyrannies and sequestrations of those impious regicides." In the north transept are two effigies of females, but they bear neither date nor inscription.

The church of Tideswell was appropriated at an early period to the Dean and Chapter of Lichfield, and a vicarage ordained. The living, now worth £330, is held by the Rev. Canon Andrew, M.A., who is also Rural Dean of Buxton.

The Grammar School, which stands on the north side of the churchyard, was founded by Bishop Pursglove, in 1560, and endowed with lands which now produce about £300 per annum. By the new scheme, which came into operation in 1876, the management is vested in 13 governors. The curriculum is comprehensive and based on thoroughly modern lines to fit youths either for commercial or professional careers. The new scheme provides four Free Scholarships; six Scholarships (free tuition and books) are offered by the Derbyshire County Council, and six Boarding Scholarships of £35 a year, tenable for two years, are offered by the Technical Education Committee of the Derbyshire County Council. Boarders are under the head master's personal care.

The Catholics of the parish were without any place of worship from the time that the old church was taken from them till 1832, when their present one was built and endowed by the Duke of Norfolk. The Wesleyan Methodist chapel is a neat Gothic structure, erected, in 1888, at a cost of £1,060, exclusive of the site. The interior is fitted with pitchpine benches to accommodate 270. Attached is a Sunday school. This chapel is in the Bradwell circuit. The Congregational Chapel was also built in 1888, at a cost of £1,050. The style is Gothic, and the interior fittings are all pitchpine. The Primitive Methodists rebuilt their chapel in 1893. At the rear is a large lecture room.

The town is amply provided with educational facilities. In addition to the Grammar school above noticed, there are excellent National schools, capable of accommodating 285 children; the Congregational school will accommodate 120; and the British school, held in the Primitive Methodist schoolroom, will accommodate 70.

Bagshaw Hall, used for concerts, lectures, &c., was erected by John Bagshaw Esq., in 1872. It is an imposing structure, built of the finest gritstone, containing a hall with platform and gallery and three ante-rooms. The hall is well lighted with gas, and will seat 500 comfortably.

LITTON is a township, containing 1,601 acres of land lying on the north bank of the river Wye. Under the provisions of the Local Government Act of 1894 it forms a parish, with a parish council of six members, and it returns one district councillor to Bakewell rural district council. The soil is limestone, and is principally in pasture. The ratable value of the township is £2,374, and the population in 1891 was 715. The Right Honourable Lord Scarsdale is lord of the manor and principal owner. The Duke of Devonshire, the trustees of M'Connell Brothers, R. J. Robinson, and C. M. Ferguson have land here.

The manor was anciently held by a family that took its name from the place. They were seated here as early as the reign of Henry III. Sir Robert Lytton, whose monument is in the Litton chapel of Tideswell Church, was Under-Treasurer of England in the reign of Henry VI. He purchased the manor of Knebworth, in Hertfordshire, which became the principal seat of the family, but Litton Hall remained in their possession till 1597, when it was sold by Rowland Lytton to John Alsop. The manor passed from the Alsops to the Bagshaws in 1606. Shortly afterwards it passed to the Bradshaws, and in 1686 to the Uptons. The next owners were the Stathams, from whom it was purchased by Sir Nathaniel Curzon, ancestor of Lord Scarsdale, the present owner.

The scenery along the Wye is romantically beautiful; the impetuous river sweeps between perpendicular cliffs and impending rocks adorned with lichens, creeping plants, and shrubs of every shade and hue. Beyond rise towering hills, whose sides are carpeted with verdure or mantled with luxuriant foliage.

The village of Litton is situated about three-quarters of a mile E. from Tideswell. There is a National School here, which is also used as a Church Mission Room. The school will accommodate 150 children, and there is an average attendance of 70. The Wesleyans have a small chapel, built in 1834. A short distance from the village, on the Wye, is Litton Mill, where cotton doubling is carried on. In a rocky hollow contiguous with the mill are the cottages inhabited by the workpeople. About a mile further down the river the Cressbrook, with its luxuriant growth of watercress, enters the Wye on the left. In a bend of the river near the junction is Cressbrook Mill, a cotton spinning and manufacturing concern, long carried on by M'Connell Brothers, and now belonging to the Cressbrook Mills Co., Ltd., who have here 570 looms at work. Sheltering the mill in the rear is a lofty eminence, clothed with plantations of fir and other trees. On the hillside, peeping through the trees, are the Swiss-like cottages, erected by the owners of the mill for the workpeople. There is a school capable of accommodating 85 children, which is also used for church service.

Litton was the birthplace of William Bagshaw, an eminent Nonconformist minister, who has been styled "The Apostle of the Peak." He was the author of a work called "De Spiritualibus Peccis," or notices concerning the work of God, and some of those who have been workers together with God, in the hundred of the High Peak. He was ejected from the vicarage of Glossop in 1662, and afterwards established several Dissenting congregations in North Derbyshire. He died at Great Hucklow in 1702. John Howe, the poet, was born here in 1774, and the ancestors of Lord Lytton took their name from this place.

WARDLOW AND WARDLOW MIERS form a joint township, containing 616 acres of land, of which the Duke of Devonshire is sole owner and lord of the manor. The ratable value is £656, and the population in 1891 was 140. It is a bleak and unattractive district, where few trees enliven the scene and stone walls take the place of hedgerows. The land, encumbent on limestone, is divided into small farms, and many of the occupiers eke out a living by working in the quarries. The village is small, and stands by the high road, two miles S. from Tideswell. A school-chapel was erected at a cost of £1,050, inclusive of burial ground. There is accommodation for 60 children, and an average attendance of 32. Service is held in it by the vicar of Tideswell. Anthony Lingard, the murderer of Hannah Oliver, after suffering the extreme penalty of the law, was hung in chains near the village, April 1st, 1815.

An ancient burial mound was opened here in 1759, when seventeen bodies were found enclosed between stone slabs. There was nothing discovered to show to what age or race they belonged.

Wardlow is in Bakewell rural district, and elects one rural district councillor.

WHESTON, a contraction of Whetstone, is a township containing 1,346 acres of land and 37 inhabitants, who are chiefly employed in agriculture. The township is valued for rating purposes at £995. The Duke of Devonshire is lord of the manor and principal owner, and the following also are landowners:—James Jennison (Belle Vue, Manchester), Thomas Shaw Ashton (Wheston), William Bennett Goodwin, Peter Bennett Goodwin, Hugh Bramwell, Mrs. Davis, and the Rev. Canon Andrew.

The village stands in a retired spot $1\frac{1}{2}$ miles W. of Tideswell. On a farm here is an interesting relic of days gone by. It is an elegant wayside cross, which fortunately has only slightly suffered from the vandalism of past generations. It stands on a base, ascended by three steps; the shaft is square and tapering, with the corners bevelled off; and the head is ornamented with tracery. In the centre is a small figure of the Blessed Virgin, holding the infant Jesus in her arms.

The feast is the nearest Sunday to Midsummer Day. For the purposes of the Local Government Act of 1894, Wheston has been added to Tideswell.

Millers Dale (a contraction of Mill House Dale) is a lovely valley on the southern border of, and partly within, this parish. The landscape is remarkably beautiful and picturesque, and from the station, which stands at a considerable elevation, there is a charming view of the valley below. The scenery along the dale is pleasingly diversified—rock and wood, and cliff and grassy slope present themselves in endless variety; whilst beneath, the sparkling Wye, in tortuous windings, meanders through the dale. A handsome little school-chapel has been erected here, wherein, the inscription tells us, the young may be instructed in the truths of Christ's holy religion, and wherein God's people dwelling in the valley may meet for His worship and service. Near the station are extensive quarries, belonging to the Buxton Lime Company; and beyond, northwards, is Monks' Dale, where the monks of Lenton Abbey had a small establishment or grange. The outline of the foundations of the chapel may still be traced, and a few carved stones remain.

CHARITIES.—Bishop Pursglove's Dole: In the foundation charter of the Grammar School, Pursglove directed that any sums that remained over from time to time out of the income, after paying the master and providing for the repairs of the school premises, should be distributed amongst the poor and needy of the parish of Tideswell. Under the new scheme, which received the Royal Assent on the 12th August, 1876, it is provided that a fixed sum of £50 a year be given in doles to the poor. Miss Downes, of Sheffield, by will in 1811, left £100, the interest thereof to be divided amongst the poor of the parish on New Year's Day. The distribution is, and has been for a long time made in February. Robert Hodgkinson, by indenture in 1592, left a rent-charge of 40s. to the poor. Ann Rossington, in 1737, left the interest of £20 to the poor. Robert Mellor, by will in 1766, gave the sum of 10s. for ever to be distributed on Christmas Day. This money is distributed by Mrs. Harrison on Christmas Eve. George Robinson left by will a rent-charge of 10s., to be given in threepenny loaves to the poor. The sum of £6 12s. 11d., received from the Gisborne charity, is distributed in warm clothing.

Post, Money Order, Telegraph Office, Savings Bank, Insurance and Annuity Office; Miss Ida Slater, postmistress. Letters via Buxton arrive at 7-20 a.m. and 5-5 p.m., and are delivered at 7-35 a.m. and 5-15 p.m. Sundays, they arrive at 10-45, and are delivered at 11-0 a.m. Mail departs at 7-45 p.m.

TISSINGTON.

This is a parish and township in the hundred of Wirksworth; electoral division of Hartington; county court district, petty sessional division, poor law union, rural district and deanery of Ashbourne. Tissington has its parish council of five members, and with Lea Hall elects one district councillor.

Its area according to the Ordnance Survey is 2,317 acres, ratable value £3,554, and the population 325. Sir William FitzHerbert, Bart., is lord of the manor and principal owner, but the following also have estates here, viz. :—Lord Denman, L. W. Parker, J. D. Fletcher, J. Swindell, Charles Etches, and Woodeaves Co. The surface is diversified, the soil loam on limestone, and is chiefly in pasture.

Tissington was one of the many manors given by the Conqueror to Henry de Ferrers, and from this family it passed to the Savages in the reign of Henry I. The last heir male of this line died in 1259; and the manor was conveyed in moieties by the marriage of the coheiresses to Meynell and Edensor. Meynell's portion subsequently passed by marriage to the families of Clynton and Francis in succession; and Cicely Francis, daughter and heiress of Robert Francis, became wife of Nicholas Fitzherbert. The other moiety passed by marriage to the Harthills, thence to the Cokaynes, and was purchased from the latter by Francis Fitzherbert, about the close of the 16th century. The moieties thus became united and have so descended to the present owner.

The village is a charming rural retreat, situated amidst picturesque surroundings, and nearly hidden by the woods and plantations that environ it on almost every side. It stands a little off the Ashbourne and Buxton road, four miles N. from the former place. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, dates from Norman times, and still retains some of the original Norman work. The inner doorway of the porch is of that period; and the tympanum, which fills up the semicircular head, retains in tolerable preservation the quaint symbolical figures carved on it by Norman hands. The massive tower at the west end is also of Norman date; and the font which is curiously ornamented with quaint figures compounded of animals and foliage, is believed to be of the same age. The church was thoroughly restored and reseated with open benches of oak, in 1853, at which time also an aisle was added on the north side. There are numerous beautiful monuments and brasses to the FitzHerberts, whose burial place this has been for 300 years past. Conspicuous amongst them is an elaborate one of alabaster which reaches nearly to the roof of the building. It is divided into two compartments; in the lower one Francis FitzHerbert and two female figures are represented in a kneeling posture, with open books before them, bearing this inscription:—

"Francis Fitzherbert, Esq., departed this life the 4th of January, Ætatis suæ 80, Anno Domini 1619.

Love, Justice, Honoure here
All at once in one appeare;
Let the reader silent be
And doe homage on his knee
To this Reverend Esquire
Yt hath now his full desire,
Of that Peace he ever loved
In this life and death approved
Layd here with his two Loyall Friends
Most renowned in their ends."

The "Loyall Friends" were his two wives.

In the upper compartment are the figures of a man and woman kneeling over a tablet inscribed to "Sir John Fitzherbert, Knt., who died in 1642. In the south wall is a monument to William Fitzherbert, Esq., barrister-at-law and recorder of Derby. He in great measure, by his industry, was the restorer of the family estate here. He was the eldest son of Anthony, who was younger son of Sir John Fitzherbert, of this place, and became heir of that family. He married Rachell, daughter of Thomas Bagshaw, of Ridge Hall, in this county, Esq., to whom she became sole heir. They left issue William, John, Martha, James, and Catherine. He dyed the 6th day of November, 1739." At the west end of the church is an organ gallery, which is reached by stone steps on the outside. The registers date from 1658.

The living is a vicarage worth £95 per annum, in the gift of Sir William FitzHerbert, Bart., and held by the Rev. James FitzHerbert, M.A. (St. John's Coll., Camb.), since 1876.

The school—a building of stone in the Elizabethan style, with an open arcade in front—was erected by Miss FitzHerbert, in 1837. Adjoining is the teacher's house. The school is endowed with £60 per annum. There are 45 names on the books.

Opposite the church is Tissington Hall, a large and handsome mansion, dating from the days of Queen Elizabeth, and comparatively little altered since. The approach from the lodge gates is through a noble avenue of lime trees, a little over a quarter-of-a-mile in length. The hall was garrisoned for the King by Col. Fitzherbert during the Civil War between Charles I. and the Parliament. Nicholas Fitzherbert acquired this estate by marriage with the coheiress of Robert Francis, Esq., of Foremark. William Fitzherbert, his descendant, was recorder of Derby. William Fitzherbert, grandson of the latter, created a baronet in 1784, was also recorder of Derby; and Alleyne Fitzherbert, another grandson, was created Lord St. Helens in 1791, but died unmarried. Sir William FitzHerbert, the fourth and present baronet, is a deputy-lieutenant, and was high sheriff of Derbyshire in 1865-6.

The village possesses considerable interest from the annual ceremony of "Well-Dressing," or "Well Flowering" as it is sometimes called, a custom so ancient that its origin is lost in the dim antiquity of ages. The Feast of the Ascension is the day set apart for the observance of this custom. The five wells in the village are tastefully decorated with flowers, arranged in various artistic devices, and bearing appropriate Scripture texts. The ceremony commences with service in the church, after which a procession is formed and the wells are visited in succession, at each of which the epistle, gospel, psalms, and a hymn are sung. The rest of the day is spent in feasting, dancing, and merry-making. Each well has a distinctive name, as Hall Well, Town Well, Hand's Well, Goodwin's Well, and Coffin Well. The family of Hand has been resident here for many generations.

Wooddeaves is a hamlet on the Ashbourne and Matlock road, three miles N from the former place. Here is a cotton mill, which gives employment to about 100 hands. It is fitted up with the best modern machinery, and contains 8,570 spindles. The special feature of the manufacture is cotton doubling for the lace and curtain thread manufacturers of Nottingham and elsewhere.

The charities of the parish amount to about £30 per annum.

Post, Money Order Office, and Savings Bank, at Mr. Lewis Smith's. Letters, via Ashbourne, arrive at 7-20 a.m., despatched at 5-20 p.m. No Sunday business. Wall Box at Wooddeaves, cleared at 5-30 p.m. Nearest Telegraph Office, Parwich (two miles). Nearest Railway Station, Ashbourne (four miles).

WINSTER.

Winster, formerly a chapelry under Youlgrave, is now a separate parish, consisting of the township of its own name, containing 1,114 acres of land and 840 inhabitants. It is in the hundred of High Peak; petty sessional division and county court district of Wirksworth; union, rural district, and deanery of Bakewell; and gives name to one of the electoral divisions of the county council. For purposes of the Local Government Act of 1894, a parish council of six members has been assigned to it. Birchover has been added to it for the election of a district councillor.

A ridge of limestone hills passes through the township from east to west, and imparts to the soil its character. The land is all freehold, and belongs to many owners, of whom the following are the principal:—Messrs. Henry Charles Heathcote, Joseph Greateorex, Joseph Blackwell, Samuel Foxlow, William Orme, John Wagstaff, John Heathcote, William Heathcote, Joseph Heathcote, Nathaniel Prime, Thomas Allen Rains, Benjamin Boam, and the Rev. Herbert Milnes, Winster; Lord Scarsdale, Mr. Daniel Holmes, Bakewell; and George Cresswell, Esq., Hereford.

Winster was one of the many manors given by the Conqueror to Henry de Ferrers, and afterwards forfeited by Robert de Ferrers, eighth Earl of Derby. Henry III. gave it to his fifth son, Edmund, Earl of Lancaster, but it subsequently came into the possession of the Mountjoys, and passed in marriage to Sir John Blount, whose descendant sold it to the Meynells. It was purchased from the latter family in the reign of Elizabeth by the freeholders. The lordship is consequently in the freeholders, but mineral royalties are paid to the Duke of Devonshire, who is the lessee under the Duchy of Lancaster. There are several lead mines in the parish, and from some of them manganese and barytes are also obtained.

Winster is a quaint-looking little town, consisting chiefly of one street built along the sloping side of a rocky ridge, six miles S.E. from Bakewell, six miles N.W. from Wirksworth, and 2½ miles from Darley Dale station, on the Midland railway. The inhabitants are chiefly employed in the lead mines. A market was established here at an early period, and held regularly on Saturdays until its discontinuance some few years ago. The Market Hall is an old-fashioned building in the centre of the village, and was formerly the property of the Eyres of Rowton. It now belongs to Mr. Joseph Greateorex, of the Bowling Green Inn. Many of the houses and shops bear an old-world appearance, but their quaintness is not without attraction. Ivy House, formerly called Oddo, is one of those old-fashioned residences that has so far escaped the hands of the modern reformer. It is in the Elizabethan style, with entrance gates of undoubted antiquity. Winster Hall dates from 1628. It is a square building of stone, the front facing the street being divided by two Corinthian pilasters, and surmounted by a balustrade. On the ceilings of the lower front rooms are frescoes, said (but doubtfully) to have been painted by West. The hall was formerly the property and residence of the Moore family, to whom there is a memorial brass in the church bearing their crest, three Moors' heads. It was for many years the residence of the late Llewellyn Jewitt, Esq., the eminent Derbyshire historian and antiquary.

Mr. Jewitt was a Yorkshireman by birth, but many years of his early and later life were spent in Derbyshire. He was a man of varied talents, and a voluminous writer. He projected and edited "The Reliquary" during the many years of its existence, and also contributed largely to the "Art Journal" and various antiquarian magazines. He was an excellent artist and engraver, and produced the illustrations for many of Charles Knight's popular works. He also furnished nearly the whole of the sketches and many of the finished drawings for the steel plates of "London Interiors," one of the finest works of art issued at that time. Of the numerous books and pamphlets which he published we can only enumerate a few:—"The Ceramic Art of Great Britain," in two imperial octavo volumes, illustrated with two thousand engravings; "Grave Mounds and their Contents;" "The Life and Works of Jacob Thompson," the eminent painter; "The Mountain, River, Lake, and Landscape Scenery of Great Britain;" "The Life of William Hutton and the History of the Hutton Family;" "The History of Plymouth;" "Ballads and Songs of Derbyshire," &c., &c. He was a herculean worker, and the above does not represent a tithe of what came from his pen.

The chapel of Winster was one of the five given, together with the mother church of Youlgrave, to the Abbey of Leicester, in the reign of Henry II. The present edifice, dedicated to St. John the Baptist, with the exception of the tower, was rebuilt in 1842, at a cost of upwards of £1,600, and restored in 1884-5, when the chancel was wholly rebuilt on a larger scale, the gallery thoroughly renovated, and the church re-seated in pitchpine. The cost, not including special gifts, was £1,854, raised chiefly through the energy and perseverance of the Rev. H. Milnes, the late vicar. The chancel is divided from the nave by two arches, which give the interior an unusual appearance. The east window—representing Faith, Hope, and Charity—is a memorial of William Heathcote and Mary, his wife; another small window, by Morris & Co., is in loving memory of Mary Milnes. There are tablets to the Holmes and Moore families, and one to Thomas Wall, who was engaged in most of the great battles of the Peninsular War. The font, rudely sculptured, is supposed by competent authorities to date from Norman times. There are five bells in the tower. Winster is one of the few places at which the Curfew bell is still rung. The living is a vicarage, worth £180 net, in the gift of the resident freeholders. After the dissolution of the monasteries, the chapel of Winster and the chapel lands were granted to the Warner family; but no provision was made for the support of a minister. Mrs. Ann Phenney and Mr. Henry Fenshaw, in 1702, gave the fourth part of the tithes of hay and corn in the township to the minister; and the living was shortly afterwards further augmented with £200 from Queen Anne's Bounty, £400 from subscriptions, and £300 by a Parliamentary grant. At the inclosure in 1809, 37a. 1r. 27p. were allotted to the incumbent.

The registers date from 1634, and contain several curious entries. Under 1770, April 17, is, "Paid George Parker, for making Thomas Ashton's coat, 6d.," and in 1785, Ann Low was paid 8d. for making Nicholas Hartle's shirt. "February 1, 1776. Paid crier for crying piggs going into church yeard 2d." One shilling was paid for killing a fox, and John Stone and wife received 6d. for urchants (hedgehogs.) In the churchyard is the tombstone of Caleb Staley, who died in 1836, bearing the following epitaph:—

"If fond of music reader, here
Approach with grief and shed a tear
On Jubal's son, thy brother.
For we who've heard his very strains
Are much afraid their scarce remains Behind him such another."

There are three Nonconformist chapels in the village, belonging respectively to the Wesleyans, Primitive Methodists, and the Wesleyan Reform Union. The National schools, in Wensley Road, were erected by subscription at a cost of £1,000. There are 120 names on the books. There are two friendly societies and a sick club, and a Young Men's Friendly Society in connection with the church. The village feast is held the first Sunday after Midsummer's Day.

In the grounds of the house now occupied by Mrs. Childers Thompson, there were discovered, in 1856, two ancient tombs about four feet below the surface, each containing a skeleton lying upon its right side, with knees drawn up and head pointing towards the north-east. The tombs were carefully examined, and it was very evident that a fire had been kindled on the spot, and after it was exhausted the bodies had been deposited. At the head had been placed a small vessel of very coarse and unornamented pottery, which was much decayed; and with the skeletons were found two iron spear-heads, one being of the unusual length of two feet, a small curved instrument of the same metal, five inches long, originally fixed in a wooden handle, the bone ferule of which remained, and the two stones of a quern, or handmill.

CHARITIES.—Anthony and Robert Moore, in 1651, each left 20s. yearly to the poor; William Hall, in 1685, left a close called Grissill, containing 1a. 2r. 15p., to the poor; John Slater, in 1694, left a rent-charge of 20s. to be distributed on the feast of St. John the Evangelist; Joseph Haynes, in 1706, gave to the poor a close called Knot-Greaves, the rent thereof to be distributed three times a year; Robert Moore, in 1718, left £5 yearly for the instruction of 10 poor children; Robert Oates, in 1719, left 10s. yearly to the minister for preaching a sermon on the anniversary of his burial, 24 loaves of the value of 6d. each for as many poor people present at the service, and 2s. to the ringers for a funeral peal; Elizabeth Buxton, in 1720, left 10s. per annum to the minister for a sermon on her anniversary, 20s. to 40 poor inhabitants, 5s. to the ringers for a peal, and similar bequests she made for the anniversaries of her aunt and of her mother.

Post, Money Order, Telegraph, Savings Bank, Annuity and Insurance Office; Henry Charles Heathcote, postmaster. Letters, via Matlock Bath, arrive 6-45 a.m., and are despatched 6-30 p.m., week-days only. Nearest Railway Station, Darley Dale, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles.

WIRKSWORTH.

This is an extensive and ancient parish, which gives a name to one of the hundreds or wapentakes of the county. It includes the townships of Wirksworth, Callow, Cromford, Hopton, Ible, and Middleton-by-Wirksworth, in the hundred of Wirksworth; the townships of Alderwasley, Ashleyhay, Biggin, Idridgehay, and Alton, in the Appletree hundred; and the township of Grange Mill or Ivonbrook Grange, in the hundred of High Peak. Several of these townships have been formed into ecclesiastical parishes, which are given separately under their own headings. Wirksworth is also the name of a county council electoral division, petty sessional division, county court district, and rural deanery. It is in Belper union.

The township of Wirksworth embraces 3,026½ acres, and had in 1891 a population of 3,725. For rating purposes it is valued at £12,937. Under the Parish and Districts Councils Act, Wirksworth urban district elects four guardians. The manorial rights belong to the Duchy of Lancaster, and are leased by the Exors. of Peter Arkwright, Esq. The land is owned by several proprietors, of whom the following are the most extensive:—Charles Wright, Esq., of Wirksworth; Henry Walthall-Walthall, Esq., Alton Manor; F. C. Arkwright, Esq., Willersley; John Baddeley, Esq., Henley Hall, Ludlow; Trustees of the late N. Price Wood; R. Leacroft, Esq.; Joseph Wheatcroft, Esq., Wirksworth; Wirksworth Grammar School; Exors. of the late Charles Allsop; Miss E. E. Arkwright, Wirksworth; Samuel Ogden, John Shaw, Arthur Stubbs, Esq., Thomas William Hunt, Esq., Exors. of the late John Smith, William Fox, George Seeds, John Seeds, William Doxey, Mrs. Slack, and Abraham John Flint. There are also about 150 freehold property owners.

Wirksworth is a place of undoubted antiquity. The manor, with its lead mines, belonged to the Abbey of Repton, to which it was probably given at the time of its foundation in the seventh century. This abbey was destroyed during the Danish devastation in 874, and it is probable that the manor and its mines reverted to the Crown. It was in the possession of the King when the Norman Survey was taken, and it remained a Royal appendage till the reign of John, who gave it to William de Ferrers, Earl of Derby, in reward for services rendered during the King's contentions with the barons. In the struggles between Henry III. and the barons, Robert de Ferrers, Earl of Derby, allied himself with the latter, and his vast estates were consequently forfeited to the Crown. Edward I. gave the manor, together with the whole wapentake, to his brother Edmund, Earl of Lancaster, and the manor and wapentake have since been attached to the Duchy of Lancaster. Thomas, Earl of Lancaster, in 1307, obtained a grant of a weekly market at Wirksworth. Within this paramount manor there was another manor, afterwards known as the Holland lands, which was given by the last-mentioned earl to Sir Robert Holland, but it was forfeited by the attainder of Henry Holland, Duke of Exeter, in 1461. Henry IV. conferred it upon his sister Ann, Duchess of Exeter; and subsequently it belonged to Margaret, Countess of Richmond, the mother of Henry VII., on whose death it devolved to the Crown. The manor was granted in 1553 to Ralph Gell, Esq., of Hopton. The present lessees of all mineral rights are the Exors. of Peter Arkwright, Esq., of Willersley.

The lead mines, on which, for untold generations, the prosperity of Wirksworth depended, were worked by the Romans. There is incontestible evidence in proof of this in the blocks or pigs of lead bearing Roman inscriptions that have been found in the neighbourhood, and now preserved in the British Museum. Our Saxon ancestors also carried on the lead-mining industry here. The mines and manor, as already stated, belonged to the old Abbey of Repton, and in 714 Eadburga, the abbess, sent a leaden coffin from Wirksworth to contain the remains of St. Guthlac, Prior of Croyland. In 835, Kenewara, Abbess of Repton, granted the manor to Humbert the Alderman, on condition that he sent yearly lead to the value of three hundred shillings, to be used at Christ's Church, Canterbury.

Domesday Book mentions three mines at Wirksworth; the successive king's jealously guarded their interests in these mineral treasures, and the district in which the ore was most abundant became known as the "King's Field," which includes the whole wapentake of Wirksworth. The lead mining industry of Derbyshire is hedged round by many curious laws and customs which date from very remote antiquity. These customs were handed down from generation to generation by oral tradition, and were put into rhyme by Edward Manlove, Esq., steward of the Barmote Court of the lead mines within the wapentake of Wirksworth, in the time of the Commonwealth. The poem was first printed in 1653, and it was re-published with explanatory additions in 1851 and 1871. It consists of 292 lines and opens as follows:—

"By custom old in Wirksworth Wapentake
If any of this nation find a Rake,
Or sign, or leading to the same, [he] may set
In any ground, and there lead ore may get.
They may make crosses, holes, and set their stowes,
Sink shafts, build lodges, cottages or coes,
But churches, houses, gardens, all are free
From this strange custom of the minery."

These old customs originally empowered all persons to dig and search for veins of ore in any part of the King's Field without being accountable to the owners of the soil for any damage done to the surface or even to the growing crops. Some restrictions have been placed upon this privilege by recent legislation, and it is now held that unless a miner procures ore enough from any vein he may be in search of to free the same, that is to pay the Crown lessee a dish of ore, he is liable to the occupier for all damage he may have done.

Since the time of Edward IV., and perhaps earlier, the mineral rights or royalties of the King's Field have been let on lease by the Crown, and the lessee receives certain dues known as "lot" and "cope." The former is every thirteenth dish of ore, and the latter is a payment of 4d. for every load or nine dishes of ore. The miners also pay a tithe to the vicar; formerly it was every tenth dish, but as litigation was frequent, the tithe was commuted in 1778 by agreement between the Rev. Richard Tillard, vicar of Wirksworth, and the proprietors of the mines, for every fortieth dish. When a miner discovered a vein of ore he made certain crosses on the ground to indicate his temporary possession, and gives the first dish of ore to the Crown lessee to free the mine. To give him title and possession, the bar master, and at least two jurymen, marks out two meers or measures of ground, each containing 29 yards.

The present lessees of the manor are the Arkwright family, who hold a Barmote Court twice a year at Wirksworth, at which all the lead mining business is transacted. This court is presided over by the steward, who is assisted by the barmaster and 24 miners as jurymen. It is held at the Moot Hall, where is kept the Miners' Standard Dish for testing all the other dishes used for measuring lead ore. It is made of brass, and bears the following inscription in old English text:—

"This dishe was made the iijj day of Octobr., the iijj yere of the reigne of Kyng Henry the VIII. before George Erle of Shrowesbury, Steward of the Kyng's most honourable household, and also Steward of the honour of Tutbery, by the assent and consent as welc of all the Mynours, as of all the Brenners, within and adjoyning the lordshyp of Wyrkysworth, percell of the said honour. This dishe to remayne in the Moote Hall at Wyrksworth, hanging by a cheyne, so as the Merchantes or Mynours may have resorte to the same at all tymes to make the tru mesure aft. the same."

Originally the veins of lead lay very near the surface, and the ore was obtained with little labour, but in course of time the mines were worked to a considerable depth, which subjected them to inundation. To relieve them of water adits, or as they are called soughs, have been driven at various times. The first of these was the Hannage Sough, then followed the Cromford Sough, and in 1780 the Meerbrook Sough was commenced from the level of the Derwent, near Hot-standwell Bridge. After a while the work was discontinued, and in 1841 an Act of Parliament was obtained, incorporating a company to complete the work and empowering them to receive one-sixth share of the produce of the mines which the sough relieved of water.

The mines were for a long time very productive. The author of "Wirksworth and Five Miles Round," speaking of the activity of the mines a century ago, says the vicar's tithe alone was worth £1,000 per annum, and, according to Dr. Cox, the vicar's tithe in 1852 amounted to about £1,200 from a single mine. In consequence of the increased difficulty and expense in obtaining the ore, nearly all the mines, about thirty in number, have been discontinued. A few men are employed at the Bage, at Bole Hill, but the output of dressed ore does not exceed 70 tons per annum.

Wirksworth, the metropolis of the lead mining industry, is situated in a valley, 13 miles N.N.W. from Derby, 10 west from Alfreton, six N.W. from Belper, and four from Matlock Bath. It is in railway communication with the Midland railway by a branch line from Duffield. The scenery in the vicinity is picturesquely beautiful. The valley is girded by hills carpeted with woodlands and meadows, and stupendous rocks curiously perforated in places by old lead mines. The town was doubtless one of the mining settlements of the Romans, and it was an industrial centre under their Saxon successors. A gossiping writer says "Wirksworth indeed was a place of importance when Liverpool was a marsh, Manchester was in its swaddling clothes, and the great manufacturing cities of the north were in their infancy." It reached the full measure of its importance some years ago, and has been declining in prosperity with the discontinuance of the mining industry. Limestone is quarried to some extent, and many of the inhabitants are employed in the tape mills, of which there are four. The Market is held on Tuesday, and Fairs on Shrove Tuesday, Easter Tuesday, Tuesday before 9th May, second Tuesday in July, second Tuesday in September, and the third Monday in November. The town is supplied with excellent water by waterworks constructed in 1823. There was formerly a spring of warm water, which gave a name to Warmbrook, and close to it was another of cold, but both have been lost through the draining of the mines. Gasworks were erected in 1838. They are now the property of the Wirksworth Gas Light and Coke Company, Limited, whose capital is £5,000, fully subscribed and paid up.

The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a large and venerable edifice, exhibiting the various styles of architecture from the Early English of the 13th century to the latest Gothic. Two, if not more, earlier churches previously occupied the site. Its immediate predecessor was a Norman structure, and various remains of that building were discovered during the recent restoration. This probably took the place of the Saxon church that was standing when the Domesday Survey was taken, and from the early connection of Wirksworth with the Abbey of Repton in the 7th and 8th centuries, it is very possible that there was a church here at that early period. A curious piece of sculpture in the north wall of the north aisle is believed by competent authorities to have belonged to this Saxon church. It was found during the repairs that took place in 1820-1, in front of the altar, about two feet below the floor. Beneath it was a stone-built vault, or grave which contained a perfect human skeleton of large size. The stone is five feet in length by two feet ten inches in breadth, and lay with the sculpture downwards, clearly showing that it did not occupy its original position. Mr. Bateman, and other local antiquaries, supposed the stone to have been an altar piece or reredos; but Dr. Cox believed it to have been the coped cover of an altar tomb. The sculpture, which is rude and defaced, was ingeniously explained by a writer in the "Gentleman's Magazine," November, 1821.

The church is cruciform in plan, comprising chancel (with an aisle or chapel on each side), north and south transepts, and nave (with side aisles and south porch.) The tower rises from the centre, where it is supported on four massive pillars, and is surmounted by a small spire of the extinguisher type, which was certainly not contemplated in the original scheme. The total length is 142 feet, and the width across the transepts 102 feet. A peculiar feature of the church is that the space eastward of the tower is larger than the space allotted to the nave on the west side. The nave is separated from the aisle on each side by an arcade of three arches, and each transept has an aisle of two bays on the east side. The fabric was repaired and enlarged by additions to the east of the transepts in 1820-1. At the same time considerable internal alterations were made, at a total cost of £2,000. Further alterations were effected in 1855, when the chancel was divided by the erection of an inner arch, and the beautiful east window erected and filled with stained glass by the county magistrates in memory of Francis Edward Hunt, Esq., of Alderwasley, who died in 1854. In 1870 a thorough restoration was commenced, under the direction of Sir Gilbert Scott, at a cost of nearly £10,000. The alterations, so injudiciously effected in 1820, were removed, and the church restored to its original plan. Many fragments of ancient incised and sculptured stones were found during the progress of the work, and are now built into the walls for preservation. The ancient double piscina was discovered in 1855, and opened out in the south wall; and on the opposite side is the aumbry recess, where the altar vessels were kept. The foundations of the previous Norman church were also discovered, and part of the base of one or two of the pillars have been exposed to view.

The church appears to have had five or six altars in Catholic times. On the south side of the chancel was the chantry founded by Sir Henry Vernon, of Haddon, in the latter part of the 16th century, for a priest to say mass and pray for his soul, &c. Another chantry, dedicated to St. Helen, was founded in 1504 by Richard Smyth, vicar of Wirksworth, but in what part of the church it was situated is not known. There was a third chantry dedicated to the Blessed Virgin, and also subsidiary altars in the transepts. In the north transept was the "Alton quire," and the chapel, or quire, in the opposite transept is supposed to have belonged to the lords of Callow. Bassano also mentions "two little quires on the west side of the steeple, one dedicated to St. Catherine, founded by the Wigleys, of Gatehouse, and the other founded by the lords of Ibble."

There are several interesting monuments in the church, but some described by Bassano in 1710 have since disappeared. In the chancel is an altar tomb to Anthony Lowe, bearing an effigy of the deceased in armour. He had been, according to the inscription, "servante to Kynge Henry VII., Kynge Henry VIII., Edward VI., and Quene Marie, ye I. buried ye xi. of Dec., 1555." The Lowes were settled at Alderwasley till 1690, when John Lowe, the last of the name, died unmarried, leaving the estate to his sister, the wife of Nicholas Hurt. His monument is thus inscribed :—

"To perpetuate the memories of John Low, son of John Low, Esq., lord of ye Manor of Alderwaslee and Ashleyhay in this parish weh John ye son dyed unmarried ye 17 day of June, 1690 aged 37. And of Elizabeth, relict of Nicholas Hurt, of Casterne in Coun. Staff. Esq., sole sister and heir of ye sd. John Low, ye son, who dyed ye 20th day of April 1713 aged 62.

This monument is erected by her grateful son and heir Charles Hurt, Esq., A.D., 1719.

Upon John Low, Esq.

Great soul for whom death would no longer stay,
But sent in haste to snatch thy life away ;
O cruel death, to those thou takest more kind
Than to the wretched mortals left behind ;
Here beauty, youth, and noble virtue shin'd,
Free from ye clouds of pride that shade ye mind :
Inspired verse may on this marble live,
But can no honour to thy ashes give. Alleluja !
Great everliving God to thee
In essence one, in persons three :
May all thy works their tribute bring,
And every age thy glory sing. Amen."

Removed from its original position and placed at a considerable height on the wall, in 1855, is a monument to the last of the Wigleys, of Wigwall, but the inscription cannot be read from the floor. The stained glass windows in the north and south walls of the chancel were inserted by the Hurt family.

The Blackwells were interred in the chapel on the north side of the chancel, and one memorial of the family remains, on which are four effigies in brass and two groups of children. The inscription is :—Of yo charite pray for the soule of Thomas Blackwall, late of Wyrksworth, and Maud his wyfe, which Thomas deptyd forthe of thys world the xxvii daye of Marche, ye yere of or Lord MDXXV., o whos soules Jhu have mey. Amen." And on labels are—"O Mater Dei memento mei" (O Mother of God remember me), "Jhesu filii Dei miserere mei" (Jesus, son of God, have mercy on me), and "Jhesu filii David miserere nobis" (Jesus, son of David, have mercy on us). Here are also several monuments of the Gell family. The oldest now extant is that of Ralph Gell, who died in 1564, and his two wives. Near this is the altar-tomb of Anthony Gell, bearing on the top a beautifully-sculptured effigy of the deceased, in gown and ruff. There are lengthy inscriptions in Latin and English. The latter we quote :—

"Heere yn this tombe lyeth buried the Bodye of Anthonye Gell, late of Hopton, Esquire, and sometyme one of the worshipfull companie of the benche in the Innar Temple, in London. Hee at his onlye coste and charges founded a Free Grammar Schoole and Almshouse in this towne of Wirkesworth. And hathe geven lande worth by yeare tenne poundes for ever for the mainteynance of the said schoole, and hathe lykewise charged his manner of Wirkesworth, called ye Holland lande, with a rent of xx poundes by yeare towards the mainteynance of five poor aged and impotent persons, in ye said almshouse for ever. He died ye xxix day of June Ano di 1583."

On the side of the tomb is the following epitaph :—

"The corpse of Antonie Gell, Esquire, entombed as you see,
Lye here, his soul ye everlasting joyes posses undoubtedlye.
His lyfe, his deathe, his faith, his hope are testimonies sure ;
God grant us many lawiers such in mercie to endure.
By wrongful means he hurted none, but wished all men good,
And helpinge was to such as nedde yf in his power it stood.
By upright lyfe he learned to die, by deathe to lyve agayne, Though earth to earth by course cometh his soule for aye doth raigne."

This chapel is now known as the Gell Chapel, and several later members of the family are commemorated in the stained glass windows. There are tablets in various parts of the church to the families of Wright, Taylor, Eley, Brown, Turner, Travis, Hall, Tomlinson, Goodwin, Smedley, Nuttall, &c. We may also mention a monument in the churchyard to the memory of Matthew Peat, of Alderwasley, who died Dec. 11, 1751, aged 109 years and 10 months ; and another bearing the following inscription :—

"Near this place lies the body of Philip Shallcross, once an eminent quill driver to the attorneys of this town; he died the 17 of Novr., 1787; aged 67. Viewing Philip in a moral light, the most prominent and remarkable features in his character were his real and invincible attachment to dogs and cats, and his unbounded benevolence towards them as well as towards his fellow creatures.

To the Critic.

Seek not to shew the devious paths Phil trode
Nor draw his frailties from the dread abode;
In modest sculpture let this tombstone tell
That much esteemed he liv'd, and much regretted fell."

There are six bells in the tower, but all are of modern date. The church will accommodate about 1,000 persons. The registers date from 1608. The living is a vicarage, in the gift of the Bishop of Southwell, and held by the Rev. W. H. Arkwright, M.A. The tithe (mineral excepted) is commuted for £74, and the lead tithe, once a very valuable source of income, is now almost valueless. The present gross value of the living is only £150 a year. A general cemetery, about four acres in extent, for Churchmen and Dissenters, was consecrated in 1856, and is under the control of a burial board. The Baptists have also a small cemetery.

Various forms of dissent are represented in Wirksworth by places of worship. Presbyterianism was established here soon after the passing of the Act of Uniformity in 1662, and a chapel was built in 1700. The members afterwards became Independents, and are now known as Congregationalists. The chapel was rebuilt in 1873 at a cost of £1,500, raised by subscription. The style is Gothic, and accommodation is afforded for 300 persons. The pulpit and platform were the gift of Mrs. Hunt, of Bole Hill. During the progress of the work a brick vault was discovered under the communion table, containing a leaden coffin, in which was the perfect skeleton of a man. There was no inscription, but, from the position of the vault under the communion table, it is supposed that one of the early Puritan divines had been buried here.

The Wesleyan chapel, in Bailey Croft, is a very plain stone building, erected in 1810. It has a gallery round three sides, giving a total accommodation for 340. At the entrance is a tablet inscribed:—"Erected by numerous friends to the memory of Elizabeth Evans, known to the world as Dinah Bede, who during many years proclaimed alike in the open air and in the pulpit and from house to house the love of Christ. She died in the Lord, Nov. 9, 1849, aged 74." Her husband was also a local preacher of some fame, and survived her about seven years. They spent the latter and greater portion of their lives in Wirksworth, where they had the mill now worked by Messrs. Wheatcroft. The Sabbath day they gave to preaching and exhortation, and often walked many miles to carry out the good work they had at heart. Mrs. Evans, under the name of "Dinah Bede," is the heroine of "George Elliot's" novel of "Adam Bede," and readers of that book cannot but feel something more than a passing interest in the spots hallowed by her footsteps.

The Baptists erected their first chapel in 1816. The present edifice was built in 1886, at a cost of £3,000. It is a handsome edifice, in the Gothic style, with Sunday school on the ground floor. The United Methodist Free Church was built in 1885-6, at a cost of £1,500 raised by public subscription, chiefly through the self-sacrificing efforts of Mrs. Potter. Under the chapel is the schoolroom, capable of holding 300 children. The Primitive Methodists have a chapel in the Dale, and also one at Bole Hill, and at Gorsey Bank.

The Grammar School was founded in 1576, under the title of "The Free Grammar School of Anthony Gell, Esquire," for the education and instruction of boys, and other literature. The founder devised certain premises and lands for the use and maintenance of the school, and directed that six discreet and honest men residing within the wapentake of Wirksworth be appointed governors of the school and the almshouses, which he also founded. The income from the endowment amounts to about £230 per annum. The school is also a District Technical School, under the scheme of the County Council. The course of instruction embraces Latin, English literature, mathematics, arithmetic, history, geography, chemistry, &c. A new schoolhouse was built about five years ago. In addition to the free scholarships already provided for by the endowment, another called the William Ogdon scholarship was recently founded under the will of the late Mrs. F. Ogdon.

The National schools (boys', girls', and infants) were erected, in 1851, at a total cost of £1,457, and enlarged, in 1884, at an expense of £400. The number of children on the books in the three departments is 367.

The British school, the first elementary school in the town, was established about 50 years ago on Greenhill. It was afterwards held in the Independent schoolroom, Coldwell Street. The present premises, the property of the trustees of the Congregational chapel, were erected in 1871. There is accommodation for 320 children, and an average attendance of 280.

The Moot Hall, in Beeley Croft, was built by the Duchy of Lancaster in 1814. The Barmote Courts for settling all mineral disputes are held here, and here also is kept the Miners' Standard Dish, given by Henry VIII. It holds a little more than 14 pints, Winchester dry measure. A commodious Town Hall was erected, in 1871, at cost a of about £6,000. It stands in the centre of the town, and includes a good Market Hall, rooms, and offices. The public-room will seat 500 persons, and is used for balls, concerts, &c. The petty sessions and county court are also held here. It is the property of the Wirksworth Town Hall Co., Ltd. The Temperance Society has also a hall, which is sufficiently spacious to seat 350. It was erected by the advocates of temperance at a cost of £640.

Wirksworth is said to have formerly had its gaol, probably a privilege of the Duchy of Lancaster for the incarceration of persons guilty of crimes within the wapentake. The Crown and Anchor Inn in the Market Place is pointed out as having been the governor's residence. The story rests entirely on tradition, but as corroborative evidence we may mention that during some alterations in the house a few years ago an elaborately carved chimneypiece was discovered. The centre is an oval with four fleur de lis in cross point to point. On each side of the oval is a square panel in which are carved the figures of two unicorns rampant, holding between them a sceptre crowned with a fleur de lis. These were the supporters of the Royal Arms of the Kingdom of Scotland, and it has been inferred that this chimneypiece was erected immediately after the union of the two Kingdoms in 1603, and this ornamented in compliment to the new sovereign, who was also Duke of Lancaster.

Bole Hill is a small village a little north of Wirksworth. It receives its name from the boles, or hearths, where lead was smelted. The Bage Mine, once one of the most productive in the district, adjoins the village, but very little lead is now obtained. The Primitive Methodists have a chapel here; there is also a Reading Room, erected in 1889 at a cost of £150, exclusive of the site, which was given by T. W. Hunt, Esq., who also contributed the sum of £20 towards the erection.

Steeple Grange is a hamlet on the brow of a hill near the Black Rocks. Gritstone is extensively quarried here for railway work, and ochre and other earths used in the manufacture of colours are also obtained. Longway Bank, 2½ miles E. by N., consists of a few scattered houses. The Wesleyans have a small chapel here.

Wigwell Grange is an estate and separate manor, containing about 500 acres of land, 1½ miles E. from Wirksworth. Lands here were given by Wm. le Fawne Vincent, the chaplain of Wirksworth, Henry Braund, his brother, and others to the Abbey of Darley, early in the reign of Henry III. The abbots erected the Grange, which was their favourite summer residence. After the dissolution of the Abbey, Henry VIII. granted the estate to Thos. Babington, Esq., but it was forfeited by Anthony Babington's futile attempt to release Mary Queen of Scots from her unjust imprisonment. Shortly afterwards the estate was purchased by Wigley, of Middleton, near Wirksworth. Henry Wigley, the last of the name at Wigwell, died in 1683, leaving three daughters coheirresses, married respectively to Jarvis Rossell, Sir John Statham, and Michael Burton, Esq. In 1774 the property was purchased by Francis Green, Esq., and it passed by marriage to the Goodwins. It is now the property of Arthur Stubbs, Esq. The hall is surrounded by pleasure grounds, and commands picturesque views of the surrounding country. It is now unoccupied, and has been generally deserted since the murder of Miss Goodwin by an insane lover named Victor Townley, some few years ago.

A little distance from Wigwell, near Hotstandwell station, is Homesford Cottage, a wayside inn, much frequented by tourists and pleasure parties. The scenery around is of a beautiful sylvan character, and hard by runs the Derwent, which affords excellent sport to votaries of the rod and line. Free tickets are granted to visitors.

ASHLEYHAY township, divided into Upper and Nether Ashleyhay, contains 1,393 acres, including roads and wastes, ratable value £1,805, and population 173. Albert Frdk. Hurt, Esq., Alderwasley Hall, is lord of the manor and one of the principal landowners. The other proprietors are Messrs. Strutt, Belper; H. W. Walthall, Esq., Alton Manor; J. Wheatcroft, Esq., Wirksworth; H. Swingler, Esq., Ireton Wood; H. S. Yeomans; and Dr. J. Adsetts, Purfleet, Essex. The tithes, gross value £148, are leased by G. H. Errington, Esq. The surface is boldly undulated, and the scenery attractive. The soil is various, but chiefly sandy and clayey, with a subsoil of grit and rachell, and is chiefly in pasture.

The village, if such it can be called, consists of three or four scattered farm-houses. Spout is a hamlet of four farms, two miles S. from Wirksworth. Near here are the Alport Heights, 980 feet above the level of the sea. Beighton Hill is a hamlet, $1\frac{1}{2}$ miles from Wirksworth, consisting of six cottages and a Primitive Methodist Chapel, built in 1851.

This township is in the Mid-Parliamentary Division, and elects one guardian and one rural district councillor.

CALLOW is a township and small village, two miles S.W. from Wirksworth, containing 1,252 $\frac{1}{2}$ acres, belonging chiefly to Henry Chandos Pole-Gell, Esq., J.P., Hopton Hall, who is also lord of the manor, and Henry Walthall Walthall, Esq., J.P., Alton Manor, Wirksworth. The manor formerly belonged to the Sacheverells. The ancient lords had a hall here, which appears to have been a mansion of considerable extent, but only a portion of the old house remains, and is occupied by a farmer. The hall was surrounded by a moat, and traces of it and of the bridge are still visible.

Callow is in the Ashbourne Union, and with Carsington forms a united parish, returning one rural district councillor and guardian.

HOPTON AND GRIFF GRANGE form a joint township containing 1,450 acres, belonging chiefly to H. Chandos-Pole Gell, Esq., J.P., Hopton Hall, who is also lord of the manor. The ratable value is £1,465, and the population in 1891 was 99. The rent-charge in lieu of the rectorial tithes is £67 10s., G. H. Errington, impropiator; and the vicarial tithe is £11 3s. 6d. Under the Local Government Act of 1894, Hopton forms with Ible a united parish returning one rural district councillor and guardian to Ashbourne Union.

A family, styled De Hopton, was possessed of land here as early as the reign of King John. From them it was inherited by the Gells, who were seated here in the early part of the 16th century. John Gell, Esq., was high sheriff of Derbyshire in 1634, and eight years later was created a baronet by Charles I. When the civil war broke out between the King and the Parliament, Sir John took a very active part on the side of the latter, and rendered very important services. The regiment of foot which he raised and commanded whilst stationed in Derby, used to make frequent excursions into the country robbing and plundering every one who was suspected of favouring the King's cause. He was appointed receiver of the proceeds of sequestered estates, but soon fell into disgrace with his own party, who accused him of appropriating £6,000. He was tried by the high court for misprison of treason, and sentenced to forfeit his estates and to be imprisoned for life, but two years later he was pardoned. Sir Philip Gell, the third baronet, dying without issue, in 1719, the title became extinct; and the estate was bequeathed to his nephew, John Eyre, Esq., who, in pursuance of the will, assumed the name of Gell. The late Philip Gell, Esq., died, without issue, in 1863; and the estate was inherited by Henry Chandos Pole, who thereon assumed the name of Gell. The hall, the seat of the Gells, is an ancient mansion, surrounded by a small park, about two miles west from Wirksworth.

The village of Hopton is small, but pleasantly situated on the high road near the Hall. There is a hospital, on which is the following inscription:—This Hospital, begun in 1719 by the late Sir Philip Gell, Bart., in his lifetime and by him endowed for the use of two poor men and two poor women of Hopton and Carson (Carsington), finished by his executors, and inhabited Sept., 1722." Sir Philip devised a rent-charge of £22 6s. per annum to be paid out of his manor of Griffie Grange, in sums of 2s. weekly to each of the four inmates. The poor of Hopton receive £2 yearly, the interest of £50 left by John Steeple.

On Hopton Moor, a little to the north, near the High Peak railway, are the bone manure works of H. & W. Taylor, which give employment to a good number of hands during the busy spring season.

Griffe Grange, formerly an extra-parochial liberty, adjoins Hopton, with which it is now united for all rating purposes. The district is picturesquely romantic. A narrow winding stream threads its way through a mountain glen, amidst rock and wood, precipice and grassy slope.

The estate, comprising 677 acres, belonged to Dale Abbey, and in 1546 was granted to Ralph Gell, from whom it has descended to the present owner.

CHARITIES.—Agnes Fearne, by will in 1574, left certain property on trust, out of the rents thereof the trustees were to pay five marks yearly to the free school if one should be established, and 40s. to the poor folk in a bede house in Wirksworth. Anthony Gell, by will dated 1578, left the sum of £60, and directed his executor to build an almshouse in Wirksworth for six aged poor and impotent persons, and bestowed on them £20 yearly for ever. Henry Gee, in 1618, left £5 per annum to the Free School, and the same sum to the almspeople, payable out of his lands in Wirksworth; and Anthony Bunting, in 1693, left £5 yearly to the poor persons in the almshouse, and 26s. to the poor to be given in bread. Dorothy Lees, in 1646, left certain lands, which are now let for £16, for the benefit of the poor of Wirksworth and Middleton. George Summers, in 1683, left a rent-charge of £3 yearly, payable out of Fishpool Flat, to the poor of Wirksworth township. Daniel Dean devised a rent-charge of 20s. yearly payable out of a house in Derby, to be distributed in fourpenny loaves to sixty poor persons on Lady Day. Francis Bunting, in 1693, left a rent-charge of £5 to be distributed in sums of 5s. each to 20 housekeepers not receiving parish relief. Mary Hoades, in 1702, left 40s. yearly, charged on a field in Hognaston, called High Greave, to the poor of Wirksworth. Sarah Woodisse, in 1707, bequeathed £40 for the benefit of the poor. This sum is now invested with the Charity Commissioners, and produces 22s. yearly. John Taylor, in 1744, left £100, which was invested in land now producing £9 4s. per annum. Elizabeth Blackburn, in 1764, left certain lands for the benefit of the poor, now yielding a rental of £12 18s. per annum. German Buxton, left by will dated 1765, the sum of £100, which was laid out in the purchase of a piece of land called Youcliff Head, the rent of which is divided amongst the necessitous poor. Elizabeth Bagshaw, widow, by will in 1797, bequeathed £2,000 consolidated bank annuities, the dividends to be distributed yearly on the 4th of November, amongst poor decayed housekeepers resident in the parish, in sums of 2s. each. Bridget Cheney, in 1802, gave £100 to the poor of Wirksworth. This, with two or three small sums amounting to a total of £125 13s. 8d., is invested with the Charity Commissioners, and £3 9s. is yearly received as interest. Elizabeth Greaves bequeathed £1,000, which is invested with the Charity Commissioners, and the dividends arising therefrom are distributed amongst the poor in February yearly, in sums of 10s. each. Mrs. Anne Wright, in 1894, in compliance with the oft expressed wishes of her late husband, left to the Official Trustees of Charitable Funds the sum of £1,000, to be by them invested in the purchase of 2½ per cent. consolidated stock, the dividends thereof to be distributed for ever by the person or persons who shall for the time being be heir or heirs-at-law of her late husband, and the vicar and churchwardens for the time being as local trustees, on the 5th day of March, in sums of not less than 10s., amongst such poor persons residing in the township of Wirksworth, and not receiving parochial relief, as they may select.

YEAVELEY.

This is a parish and township containing 1,377 acres of land; its ratable value is £2,294, and the population 172. The principal landowners are John Harrison, Esq., Snelston Hall, who is also lord of the manor; Sir Peter Carlaw Walker, Bart.; Reuben James Robinson, Boothay; James Evans, Osmaston; John Chadfield; Joseph Potter, Fenny Bentley; Samuel S. Potter, Over Haddon; Exors. of Mrs. Woodroffe; John Clewes, Littleover; and the Rev. J. B. Hunt, Kirk-linton, Carlisle. The parish is in Appletree hundred; county council division of Sudbury; petty sessional division, county court district, union, rural district, and deanery of Ashbourne. The united parish of Yeaveley-with-Rodsley elects one district councillor.

At the time of the Domesday Survey the manor of Gheveli (Yeaveley) belonged to Henry de Ferrers, under whom it was held by Alsi. The Founs or Fawnes, who may have been the descendants of this Alsi, had lands here soon after the Conquest, which lands were given by Ralph Foun to the Knights Hospitallers in the reign of Richard I. Subsequently the manor was held by the Meynells for several generations, and passed thence, probably by purchase, to the Shirleys. Sir Hugo Shirley, who was slain at the battle of Shrewsbury in 1403, died seized of it; and it remained with this family till sold by Earl Ferrers a few years ago.

The village is small, and stands $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles S. of Ashbourne, and four miles from Clifton, the nearest railway station. There was here at an early period a chapel which was subordinate to Shirley. It appears to have been permitted to fall into decay after the Reformation, and was wholly disused in the early part of last century. Not a trace of it now remains. Another chapel was erected towards the end of last century; but that barn-like structure was taken down in 1840, and the present church, dedicated to the Holy Trinity, was erected at a cost of £500. It is a neat building of brick, with stone dressings, partly covered with ivy, and consists of chancel, nave, south porch, and west tower containing one bell. There are 154 sittings, all of which are free. The living is now a vicarage, worth about £80 per annum, in the gift of the vicar of Shirley, and held by the Rev. William Buck Dearden, who is also vicar of Alkmonton, where he resides. The Vicarage House, a neat Gothic building, erected at a cost of about £1,000, is occupied by Edward James Bowman, Esq. The great tithes, commuted value £50, belong to Mrs. Shirley; the small tithes, payable to the vicar of Yeaveley, were commuted for £20 yearly, to which the vicar of Shirley adds £45.

The Nonconformists have a place of worship in the village, erected in 1814, and known as Providence Independent Chapel. It is a brick building, with cemented front, and will seat 120. The National School, built at the same time as the church, is attended by 40 children.

Stydd, formerly a separate township and tithe and toll free liberty, containing 313 acres, is now added to Yeaveley for all rating purposes. Here was formerly a preceptory of the Knights of St. John of Jerusalem, more generally known as the Knights Hospitallers. Ralph le Fown, in the reign of Richard I., gave them a hermitage here and the adjoining lands, stipulating, however, that Robert, the son of Richard, should inhabit it during his life, and that the Hospitallers should receive him (the donor) into the Order whenever he wished to enter. The possessions of the preceptory were considerably enlarged by William Meynell, lord of Yeaveley, and other benefactors. Ambrose Cave was preceptor when Henry VIII. suppressed all religious orders. The gross income of the preceptory is said to have been £107 3s. 8d., which was wholly spent in the maintenance of hospitality and the distribution of alms to the poor. The site was granted by Henry VIII., in 1543, to Charles, Lord Mountjoy, whose son, in 1557, conveyed it to Ralph Brown, and the latter, two years later, transferred it to Francis Colwich. It has repeatedly changed ownership since that time. The monastic buildings have been removed, but the ruins of the chapel, thickly covered with ivy, still remain. The small circular-shaped font, now converted into a flower vase, stands near the ruins; and on the sward lies a tombstone or coffin lid, bearing an incised cross with floriated head and foot, and sword by the side of the stem. The preceptory was dedicated to St. Mary and St. John the Baptist.

Near the ruins is Stydd Hall, an embattled mansion dating from the reign of Elizabeth, but restored and improved in recent years. It is the property of the Exors. of the late Mrs. Woodroffe, and occupied by Mr. Samuel Robinson, farmer.

Hales Green is a hamlet of scattered houses, 1 mile N.W. of Yeaveley.

CHARITIES.—There are three small bequests, amounting to 25s., which is distributed in bread at Christmas.

YOULGRAVE.

This parish comprises the townships of Youlgrave, Gratton, Harthill, and Middleton; and formerly also included the chapelries of Rowtor, Elton, Stanton, and Winstor. Its present extent, according to the "Diocesan Calendar," is 7,945 acres, and population 1,317. The parish lies on the southern border of the High Peak, and partakes of the wild mountain character of that district. It is intersected by the river Lathkill, which flows through a beautiful and picturesque little dale. Youlgrave is in the hundred of High Peak; electoral division, county court district, poor law union, rural deanery, and petty sessional division of Bakewell.

The township of Youlgrave embraces 2,352 acres of land, exclusive of roads, wastes, and water, which is valued for rating purposes at £3,358. The population in 1891 was 1,164. Under the Local Government Act of 1894, Youlgrave and Harthill form a united parish with seven parish councillors and two district councillors and guardians.

The Duke of Rutland is lord of the manor and principal owner. The Duke of Devonshire and Major McCreagh Thornhill have estates here, and there are a few small owners. The surface is of a varied character, rising in places into bold and rugged hills; in others, into lofty wooded eminences. Lead ore occurs amongst the hills, and mining operations have been carried on for a considerable length of time in the parish. Barytes, manganese, and zinc ore are also obtained from some of the mines; and from the Long Rake mine there is a large output of calc spar, which is extensively used for rock-work, carriage drives, and asphalt footpaths.

Youlgrave (Giolgrave in Domesday Book), was held, in the time of Edward the Conqueror, by two Englishmen, named Colle and Chetel; and after the Norman Conquest, it would appear that the descendants of the former were permitted to retain the patrimonial estate, for in or before the reign of Henry II. (1154-1189) a grandson of Colle gave the church of Youlgrave, with its chapels, lands, tithes, and all things pertaining to it, to the Abbey of St. Mary's, Leicester. The Rossingtons possessed lands here at an early date, and they were succeeded by the Gilberts, one of whom married the daughter and coheirress of Sir John Rossington.

The village of Youlgrave, the seat of a considerable mining population, is situated on the summit and slope of an eminence on the north bank of the river Lathkill, three miles S. by W. from Bakewell. The village is supplied with water from a fountain, erected in 1829. The water is drawn from a spring at a considerable elevation on the opposite side of the river, and conveyed in pipes to the fountain. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is an ancient edifice of stone, consisting of chancel, nave, north and south aisles, south porch, and large embattled tower at the west end, containing a peal of eight bells, given by Mr. and Mrs. Thornhill, in 1870. The fabric is an interesting antiquarian study, as it exhibits the various styles of architecture that have prevailed since the 12th century. The original Norman work may be seen in the pillars and arches of the south aisle; those of the north aisle are pointed, and later. In the 15th century the nave was lengthened westwards, and the chancel and tower rebuilt. The latter is an admirable specimen of the architecture of that period, bold in conception and well proportioned, and is said to be the finest in the county excepting All Saints', Derby. The church was thoroughly restored in 1869-70, under the direction of R. Norman Shaw, Esq., A.R.A., at a cost of £4,650. The east and three or four other windows have been rebuilt, the oaken roof thoroughly repaired, the modern singing loft removed, and the church re-seated in oak. The most interesting object in the interior is a curious font, brought from Elton 60 years ago. It is undoubtedly the work of a very early period, but whether Saxon or Norman is still a disputed question. It is of porous red sandstone, and stands on four slender shafts. By the side of the bowl, and carved out of the same block of stone, is a subsidiary font or stoup, beneath which is sculptured a dragon, feet upwards, and represented as supporting the small font in its mouth. This subsidiary font is a unique figure, and has given rise to much controversy as to its original purpose. Against the north wall of the chancel is the effigy of a cross-legged knight, with sword on his left thigh and a heart in his clasped hands. It bears no name nor heraldic device, but tradition asserts that it is the memorial of Sir John Rossington. Another and more beautiful monument, in alabaster, is the figure of a man in plate armour, beautifully sculptured. His head rests on a helmet which bears a cock, the crest of the Cockaynes, and his feet rest on a lion. The legs, which had been long broken off, were carefully restored in 1873. On the sides and ends of the tomb are carved figures of angels, bearing shields of arms of the Cockaynes and their alliances. Against the east end of the north aisle is a monument, bearing in the centre, carved in relief, a figure of the Blessed Virgin and Child; and on one side is represented a man kneeling, with seven boys behind him; and on the other a female, with ten girls behind her. The inscription shows that it is the tomb of Robert Gilbert and his wife Joan, the latter of whom died in 1492. There are also monuments to the Rows and the Bradburys, bearing 17th century dates. The east window is exquisitely painted. The living is a vicarage, net value £210, in the gift of the Duke of Devonshire, and held by the Rev. William Parker Stamper.

The registers, which commence in 1558, are well preserved, and legible throughout; and the churchwardens' accounts are very complete from 1604. They contain numerous interesting entries, two of which we transcribe:—"This year 1614/5 Jan. 16, began the greatest snow which ever fell upon the earth, within man's memorye. It covered the earth fyve quarters deep upon the playne. And for heapes or drifts of snow, they were very deep; so that passengers, both horses and foot, passed over gates, hedges and walles. It fell at 10 severall tymes and the last was the greatest, to the greate admiration and feare of all the land, for it came from the fowre pts of the world, so that all entryes were full, yea, the south pte as well as these mountaynes. It continued by daily encreasing untill the 12th day of March (without the sight of any earth, eyther upon hilles or valleyes) upon which day (being the Lorde's Daye) it began to decrease; and so by little and little consumed and wasted away, till the eight and twentyth day of May for then all the heapes or drifts of snow were consumed, except one upon Kinder's Scout, which lay till Witson week and after. * * * There fell also ten lesse snowes in Aprill, some a foote deep, some lesse, but none continued long. Upon May day, in the morning, instead of fetching fflowres, the youthes brought in flakes of snow, wh. lay above a foot deep upon the moores and mountaynes. All these aforesayd snows vanished away and thoed with little or no rayne."

"1615 A dry Summer. There was no rayne fell upon the earth from the 25th day of March until the 2nd day of May, and there then was but one shower; after which there fell none tyll the 18th day of June, an then there fell another; after yt there fell none at all tyll the 4th day of August, after which tyme there was sufficient rayne upon the earth; so that the greatest pt of this land, specially the south pts, were burnt upp, both corne and hay. * * * This pt of the peake was very sore burnt upp, only Lankishyre and Cheshyre had rayne ynough all the Summer."

There are chapels in the village belonging to the Wesleyans, Primitive Methodists, Independents, and Wesleyan Reform Union. The school was established in 1756, and new premises were erected in 1868. There are two departments, mixed and infants, with a total attendance of 270.

Lomberdale, about one mile from the church, was the residence of the late Thos. Bateman, Esq., the eminent antiquary, and author of "Vestiges of the Antiquities of Derbyshire," "Ten Years' Diggings in Celtic Grave-mounds," and other archæological works of great repute. He formed here a museum of relics and curiosities, now located in the Free Library and Museum at Sheffield. Conksbury is a hamlet of two farms on the banks of the Bradford brook, one mile N. from Youlgrave; and Meadow Place is a farm of 731 acres, a little further up the dale, and now in the occupation of Mr. G. Wallwin. Both these places were given by William Avenel to the Abbey of Leicester. After the dissolution of that monastery, the manor of Meadow Place was granted to Sir William Cavendish, from whom it has descended to the Duke of Devonshire. The monks had a Grange here, with a chapel attached. The latter, long used as a barn, was pulled down in 1856. The rectory and advowson of the vicarage of Youlgrave were also at the same time granted to Sir William.

GRATTON is a township, comprising 914 acres of land, belonging solely to Major McCreagh Thornhill. Its ratable value is £748, and population 95. For purposes of the Local Government Act of 1894, it has been united with Elton. The township lies in a valley, on one side of which the soil is encumbent on gritstone, and on the other side on limestone. The land is all in grass, and a large cheese factory is carried on by a combination of farmers. The building was erected by Major Thornhill, and is large enough to receive the milk of 300 cows. The manor of Gratton was held by Henry de Ferrers at the time of the Domesday Survey; and the Foljambes possessed lands here in the 14th century. Subsequently the manor came into the possession of the Lowes, and was purchased from that family in 1723, by John Thornhill, Esq., from whom it has descended to the present owner. There was anciently a chapel here, but nothing is known of its history, nor has tradition preserved the memory of its site. The village is small, and is situated two miles S. from Youlgrave. Gratton is in the electoral division of Winster.

HARTHILL, or HARTLE, is a small township containing 897 acres of land lying about one mile E. from Youlgrave; ratable value £887, and population 83. The soil is various—clay, gritstone, and limestone, and generally fertile. It is all in pasture. The Duke of Rutland is lord of the manor and principal owner; Major Thornhill, of Stanton Hall, has some land here. The township is now, under the provisions of the Local Government Act of 1894, united with Youlgrave.

On the southern border of the township is a craggy ridge, along which enormous blocks of stone are scattered in a most confused manner, imparting to the scene a wild and savage aspect. At one spot the huge rocky mass rises almost to a prodigious height above the valley, and is known as Cratcliff Tor. At the foot of this is a rudely-fashioned archway, leading to a cave called the Hermitage. Within, sculptured on the wall, is a crucifix, now somewhat defaced. Close to this is a niche, which probably held the hermit's lamp, and a seat hewn out of the rock. Neither history nor tradition has preserved the memory of the man who, perchance, quitted the gaieties of the world to spend the rest of his life in this secluded retreat. Not far from Cratcliff Tor is another very singular mass of rocks, tumbled, as it were, confusedly together. At the extremities two huge stones, each about 18 feet high, and about 60 feet apart, stand upright, looking in the distance like the chimneys of a mansion, and, therefore, sometimes playfully called "Mock-Beggar's Hall." The face of these rocks has been furrowed by the action of the weather, from which circumstance the mass has been named Grained Tor. It is also designated Robin Hood's Stride. In a field to the north, called Nine Stone Close, are the remains of a Druidical Circle, about 13 yards in diameter. When Glover wrote there were seven stones remaining, now there are only five. Contiguous with Grained Tor is Durwood Tor, on the top of which are three rock basins. They are artificially formed, and are supposed to have had some connection with druidical worship. Not far from this, on the farm of Mr. Joseph Flewitt, is Castle Ring, believed to have been an ancient British encampment. From this spot there is an extensive prospect of glorious scenery, embracing Youlgrave, Stanton, and many miles around. There are some veins of lead among the hills, but very little ore has been obtained in late years.

The manor of Harthill was held at an early period by a family who took their name from the place. Elizabeth, the daughter and heiress of Sir Richard de Harthill, conveyed this and other manors, by marriage, to Edmund Cockayne in the latter part of the 14th century; and Harthill remained with the latter family till 1599, when Edward Cockayne sold the manor to an ancestor of the Duke of Rutland. The Hall, the residence of the Harthills and the Cockaynes, is an ancient stone structure, situated on a lofty eminence called Priest Hill, 1½ miles E. from Youlgrave. A chapel was erected here previous to the year 1259, when Sir Richard de Harthill founded a chantry within his chapel of Harthill. The site is now occupied by a barn, in which may be seen portions of a niche and other fragments of the original building. The hall, now a farmhouse, is the residence of Mr. William Potter, whose family have occupied it for several years.

MIDDLETON forms a joint township with SMERRILL, containing 2,895 acres; ratable value, £2,660; population, 176. It is situated in the Wirksworth hundred, and is now more generally styled Middleton-by-Youlgrave. Thomas W. Bateman, Esq., Middleton Hall, is lord of the manor and principal landowner. On the west side of the township, on Middleton Common, is Arbor Low, a famous Druidical circle, one of the most interesting monuments of antiquity in Derbyshire. The stones forming the circle are from six to eight feet in length, from three to four feet in width, unhewn, and of various shapes. It is impossible to tell their original number, as many of them have been broken, but there have probably been from thirty to thirty-five, all of which lie horizontally on the ground, and incline towards the centre. The circle is about 150 feet in diameter, and is surrounded by a vallum and entrenchment, with openings or entrances on the north and south sides. Near one of these is a barrow or burial mound.

The manor of Middleton was held at the time of the Norman Survey by Ralph Fitzhubert; in the 13th and 14th centuries it belonged to the Harthills; and it passed from them to the Cockaynes by the marriage of the heiress of Richard de Harthill in the reign of Henry VI. From the latter family it was purchased by Francis Fullwood, about the year 1602. Subsequently it came into the possession of Viscount Howe, and was sold by his coheirs to Thomas Bateman, Esq., great-grandfather of the late owner. The hall is a substantial castellated building, erected in 1824 out of the materials of the old hall, which stood near. The grounds are extensive, and tastefully laid out. There is a quantity of old oak carving in the house, and in the entrance hall are effigies of knights in armour and other antiquities. The abbot and monks of Leicester possessed a large tract of land at Middleton, and had a grange here, to which a chapel was attached, but not a vestige of these now remains above ground.

Middleton-by-Youlgrave is a well-built village, embosomed among trees, 1½ miles S.W. from Youlgrave. It is well supplied with water, pumped from a spring in the romantic glen of the river Rowtor, and is also provided with excellent appliances for the extinction of fires. The Congregational Chapel was built in 1826, by Thomas Bateman, Esq., and endowed by him with £40 per annum. In a field adjoining the chapel is the tomb of that gentleman, and there is a monument to his memory in the chapel. The Primitive Methodists have also a chapel here, a temporary structure of wood, erected in 1850. There is a school in the village, attended by about 40 children. At the enclosure of the common, 14 acres of land were awarded to the vicar of Youlgrave in lieu of tithes.

Smerrill Grange consists of one farm, the property of the Duke of Rutland.

Middleton and Smerrill elect one district councillor and guardian.

ILKESTON PARLIAMENTARY DIVISION.

BREASTON.

Breaston is a parish and township in the hundred of Morleston and Litchurch, petty sessional division and county court district of Derby, union and rural district of Shardlow, and deanery of Ilkeston. Its total extent, according to Ordnance measurement, is 1,492 $\frac{3}{4}$ acres, ratable value £7,965, and the population, in 1891, was 882. Robert Posnett Stevens, Esq., of Sandiacre, is lord of the manor; Geoffrey Nicholas Charlton, Chilwell Hall; W. J. Watson, Esq.; Mr. Thomas Handley, Loughborough; and Mr. Joseph Wright Chappell are the principal landowners. The common lands, to the extent of about 300 acres, were enclosed in 1757, and divided amongst the landowners in proportion to the extent of their property.

The manor of Braidestune, at the time of the Domesday Survey, belonged to Roger de Busli. Subsequently it passed through various families to the Babingtons, from whom it was purchased in the reign of Elizabeth by Michael Willoughby. Anne, one of the daughters and coheiresses of Sir Henry Willoughby, conveyed the manor to her husband, the Hon. Anchtel Grey. In the first half of the present century it belonged to the Rev. John Hancock Hall, and is now the property of R. P. Stevens, Esq.

The village of Breaston, which is of considerable size, stands 7 $\frac{1}{2}$ miles E. of Derby, 2 $\frac{1}{2}$ miles W. of Long Eaton, and about half-a-mile from the stations of Sawley and Draycott on the Derby and Nottingham branch of the Midland railway. The Derby and Sandiacre canal also passes in close proximity to the village. The lace manufacture is carried on to some extent by Mr. W. Plackett, who employs about 40 machines.

The church, dedicated to St. Michael, is a venerable edifice of stone consisting of chancel, nave, south aisle, and a western tower surmounted by a spire. It is chiefly in the Decorated and Perpendicular styles, but traces of older work remain. On a buttress near the tower are the initials E.T.R.W. Chur. W., and date 1680, with two shields of arms below, indicating some repairs made to the church at that time. It underwent some restoration in 1840, when it was re-pewed and a west gallery added at a cost of £200. In 1871, the gallery was taken down, the chancel fitted with choir stalls, and the rest of the church re-seated with open benches at a cost of £430, and a further restoration of the fabric will shortly take place at an estimated cost of £800. The font, which consists of a fluted bowl and stem of Derby alabaster, bears the date 1750. The west window, representing St. Michael, was given by the Rev. H. B. Hall when the church was restored in 1871. The east window consists of three lights, the central one being filled with stained glass: a three-light window in the south aisle is a memorial of William Halliday, who died in 1871. There are marble monuments to John Wyre Langford and John Stevens; and on the outside of the south wall is a tablet to Sarah Dyche, who died July 27th, 1833, aged 100 years. The tower contains three bells, one of which dates from Mediæval times, and a clock with chimes. This was put in by the inhabitants to commemorate another centenarian, Mrs. Elizabeth Stevens, who died in November, 1886, and was buried at Sandiacre. The churchyard was enclosed and consecrated in 1823, when the privilege of sepulture was obtained.

Breaston was formerly a chapelry under Wilne. In 1711, the living was united with Risley, and so remains. The Ecclesiastical Commissioners, in 1868, transferred certain tithes to the perpetual curate of Risley and Breaston, and the united benefices became a rectory. It is in the gift of the Bishop of Southwell, and held by Canon J. C. Massey; curate, the Rev. W. W. Gawn, B.A.

There are chapels in the village belonging to the Primitive Methodists and the Wesleyan New Connexion. The latter one was erected in 1875, to supersede a chapel built in 1803.

The National School was erected in 1837, and enlarged in 1887, by the addition of an infants' room. There is accommodation for 140, and an average attendance of 100. Boys over eight years of age attend the school at Risley.

CHARITIES.—John Charlton, gent. and citizen of London, but a native of this parish, who died in 1712, gave to the minister and churchwardens of Breaston £100, the interest thereof to be given to the poor. With this money was purchased eight acres of land at East Bridgford, Nottinghamshire, now let for £20 yearly, which is distributed at Christmas in sums varying from 2s. to 12s. This charity is vested in three trustees, whereof one is always the rector of Risley, and the other two are appointed by the parish council.

CODNOR AND LOSCOE.

Codnor and Loscoe are two hamlets forming a joint township or civil parish, containing about 1,900 acres of land, belonging chiefly to the Butterley Company, Limited; H. C. Vickers, Esq., Kilburn Hall; and the Woolley family. The ratable value, according to the last assessment, is £12,088, and the population in 1891 was 3,848. The parish is in the hundred of Morleston and Litchurch, petty sessional division of Smalley, county court district and deanery of Alfreton, Basford union, and with Codnor Park forms a division for the election of a member of the county council. The soil is clayey, with part ratchel, and lies upon the coal measures. Two seams, known as Loscoe Hard and Soft Coals, are worked at Loscoe colliery. The Hard Coal seam is 32 inches in thickness, and is reached at a depth of 130 yards from the surface; and the Soft Coal, which is only 12 inches thick, is obtained at a depth of 112 yards. The Butterley Co., who are the owners, have another colliery at Bailey Brook, and give employment in the two pits to about 700 men and boys.

Codnor village, which is of considerable extent, and chiefly inhabited by the employés of the Butterley Co., Limited, is situated $1\frac{1}{4}$ miles E. from Ripley, five miles from Alfreton, the same distance from Belper, and about half-a-mile from the Crosshill and Codnor station, on the Heanor and Pye Bridge branch of the Midland railway. Codnor and Loscoe were formed into an ecclesiastical parish in 1844, from the parishes of Denby, Heanor, and Pentrich, and the same year a church was erected on the crown of an eminence called Cross Hill, about midway between the two villages. It is a substantial edifice of stone, consisting of chancel with vestry on the north side, nave, and a west tower with embattled parapet and pinnacles. The style is Gothic, without any architectural display, and about £2,000 was spent on its erection, exclusive of the stone, which was given by Mr. Wood. The chancel and vestry were added in 1890. The west end is crossed by a gallery, which increases the accommodation to 517. The tower contains one bell, brought from Eastwood old church when that edifice was pulled down, bearing the inscription, "God Save the Queen, 1713." The living is a vicarage, worth £215 a year with residence, in the gift of the Crown and bishop alternately, and held by the Rev. W. Bates since 1884. In close proximity to the church is the National School, appropriated now to boys only, built at the same time as the church. It consists of one main room and a classroom, having a total accommodation for 141 children. There are at present 192 names on the books. The schools for girls and infants are in Codnor village.

Nonconformists are fairly numerous in the parish. The Wesleyan Chapel was erected in 1827, and considerably enlarged in 1875. It is comfortably furnished to seat 200, and is in the Ripley circuit. The United Methodist Free Church was built in 1854, by the seceders from the Wesleyan Society, and subsequently enlarged to accommodate 750. The same body has also a day school, built in 1873, at a cost of £1,000, and enlarged during the past year at a further expense of £440. It is conducted on the British or Undenominational principle, and consists of two departments, mixed and infants, having an average attendance of 169 and 96 respectively. The Primitive Methodists erected their first place of worship in 1857; and in 1880 a handsome new chapel was built at a cost of £1,300, to accommodate 750. It is an imposing structure of brick, well lighted, and elegantly furnished with open pews of pitchpine. A gallery is carried round the entire building. The old chapel is used as a Sunday school.

Codnor was anciently the property of the knightly family of Grey, who had a castle and park here. (See Ironville and Codnor Park.)

Loscoe is a considerable village, about one mile S. from Codnor. The Baptists have a chapel here, built in 1848, at a cost of about £500. The interior is furnished with open benches, and a gallery carried round three sides increases the accommodation.

A Burial Board for the parish was formed in 1874, and in 1876 about 1½ acres of ground adjoining the churchyard were laid out as a cemetery at a cost of £900. The Quakers have a small burial ground at Breach Farm, where they had formerly also a meeting house.

Stoneyford and Woodlincoln are small villages in this parish.

DALE ABBEY.

This chapelry and township, formerly extra-parochial, comprises 1,758 acres of land, belonging chiefly to Earl Stanhope, who is also lord of the manor. The other proprietors are the Dale Abbey Colliery Co.; W. D. N. Drury-Lowe, Esq.; Henry Edward Pares, Esq.; the Mapperley Colliery Co.; Thomas Colton, Esq., Sandiacre Lodge; and the Stanton Iron Works Co., Ltd. The number of inhabitants in 1891 was 399, and the present ratable value is £2,681. The parish is in the hundred of Morleston and Litchurch; petty sessional division of Smalley; county court district of Belper; union and rural district of Shardlow; and deanery of Ilkeston. Agriculture and coal mining are the principal industries. Ironworks were established by Messrs. English & Co., in 1788, but they do not appear to have achieved any great success. There was one furnace, and in 1796, the total yield of pig iron was only 443 tons. A few years later the works were dismantled and subsequently taken down.

The chief interest of the place centres in the Abbey that once stood here, and of which a mere fragment is all that now remains. Fortunately the Abbey had its historian, one Thomas de Muscam, a canon of Dale, and a man of considerable erudition. He lived towards the end of the 13th century, and his "Chronicle of Dale" is preserved amongst the Cottonian M.S.S. in the British Museum. He recounts the story of the Hermit of Depedale, as this Dale was originally called, which he heard from the lips of the Lady Matilda Salicosa-Mara, the foundress of the Abbey. It is to the following effect:—There once lived in St. Mary's, Derby, a baker, a veritable Cornelius who, week by week, bestowed upon the poor, such food and clothing as remained above the passing needs of his household. Having thus spent many years of his life in deeds of almsgiving and piety, the Blessed Virgin appeared to him in a dream whilst he slept one autumn noon, and thus addressed him: "Acceptable in the eyes of My Son and of Me are the alms thou hast bestowed. But now, if thou art willing to be made perfect, leave all thou hast and go to Depedale, where thou shalt serve My Son and Me in solitude; and when thou shalt happily have finished thy course, thou shalt inherit the kingdom of love, joy, and eternal bliss, which God has prepared for those who love Him." Perhaps the wish may have been father to the thought; but, however, that may be, on awakening he returned thanks to God, and "straightway went forth without speaking a word to anyone." He at length found the place mentioned in the dream, and there, in the side of the valley, he scooped out a small dwelling with an altar towards the south. He had led here his solitary life for sometime when, one day about the year 1135, Ralph FitzGeremund, lord of half the town of Ockbrook, being out with his hounds, found his course intercepted by a morass. Gazing round the wild and desolate scene that stretched on every side of him, he espied the curling smoke of the hermit's fire. Surprised and not a little annoyed that anyone should have dared without his permission to have made his abode there, he approached the spot and there beheld the hermit clad in rags and skins. The knight's heart was touched by the hermit's tale of penitential woe, and he granted him the place, and to provide for his maintenance he also bestowed on him the tithe of his mill at Burgh (Borrowash). The recluse, who suffered from a scarcity of water, fortunately discovered a spring one day a little westward of his dwelling, and near it "he made for himself a cottage and built an oratory in honour of God and the Blessed Virgin." Here he continued to lead his solitary and penitential life till death relieved him from all earthly troubles, and the fame of his sanctity spread forth far and wide.

Depedale and the rest of Sir Ralph FitzGeremund's lands had passed by the marriage of his daughter and heiress to Serlo de Grendon, and the latter granted Depedale, with all its appurtenances, to his aunt, who was also his godmother, popularly known as "The Gomme* of the Dale," that she might reside there. She had a son Richard in holy orders, who ministered in her chapel here, and he, with her consent, invited the canons of Calke to establish a house of their Order. The little colony consisted of a prior and five canons, one of whom was Richard, the Gomme's son. Their first work was the "erection of a church, a costly labour; and other offices." They were of the Augustinian Order, and were popularly known as Black Canons, from the colour of their habit. After some years, laxity of discipline crept into the little community, and the canons began to prefer the pleasures of the chase to prayer or holy meditation, and were more frequently found in the forest than in the church. The information having been conveyed to the King that the canons helped themselves pretty freely to venison in the Royal forest, they were commanded to quit Depedale. After their removal some monks of the Premonstratensian Order, from Topholme, in Lincolnshire, were introduced, and to them was given the park of Stanley, and the monastery became known as the Abbey of Stanley Park. After abiding here about seven years, they returned to the mother convent, as from the poverty of the place they were utterly unable to exercise that unstinted hospitality which every comer expected from the monks. The Chronicle of De Muskham does not paint the character of the Prior in a very favourable light. Another attempt was made to colonise the place with canons of the same order from Welbeck; but after five years' struggle with poverty they became disheartened, and returned to Welbeck. The next attempt to establish a monastery here was made under more favourable auspices. The Lady Matilda de Salicosa-Mara and her husband obtained from her father a grant of Stanley, and permission to confer the same on the Premonstratensian monks. Nine canons were sent from Newhouse, in Lincolnshire, to found a house of the Order at Stanley Park, and by their zeal and diligence was raised a noble abbey, which for three centuries prospered and fulfilled its pious and useful purposes, till it fell in the general wreck of religious houses at the Reformation. It included amongst its benefactors the Grendons, Fitzralphs, Strelleys, and other powerful families, who conferred upon the monks many broad acres of land, and the community was also endowed with the advowsons of the churches of Heanor, Ilkeston, and Kirk Hallam.

The abbey was founded in 1204, and surrendered into the hands of the King's Commissioners in 1538, during which time it was ruled over by nineteen abbots, whose names have been preserved in the Dale Chartulary, now preserved in the British Museum. The community consisted of an abbot and fourteen or fifteen canons, whose total yearly revenue was £144 12s. 9d., equal in purchasing power to about £1,700 of present money. The abbot, John Bebe, received a pension of £26 13s. 4d. as a solatium for the loss of his dignity, and the canons received various smaller pensions, ranging from £5 6s. 8d. to 16s. 8d. Francis Pole, Esq., of Radbourn, took possession of the site, probably as lessee under the Crown, and he was also the purchaser of a great deal of the household goods, live stock, church furniture, &c., at prices which appear ridiculously low. We quote a few of them:—"At the hygh autler a table of woode paynted, ii candlestykes of brasse, a lampe, the seates in the quier, a crucifyx, Mary and John, a payre of organs," all went for 20s.; two side altars, with two tables of alabaster, brought 6s.; the iron grating around the founder's tomb, and the timber work, realised 8s.; the rood altar and the rood, 2s.; the furniture of the Lady Chapel was sold for 5s.; the abbey clock for 6s.; and the roofs, iron, glass, paving stones, and grave stones all went for £18. He got eight oxen for £4, 15 young bullocks at 4s. each, 20 pigs for 13s. 4d., and horses at 20s. each. Some of the stained glass windows were removed to Morley church, to which they are said to have been presented by Francis Pole, Esq.

When the Messrs. Buck* published their view of the Abbey ruins in 1727, considerable portions of the walls were then standing, and it appears to have been in much the same condition when Dr. Stukeley wrote in 1730. A century later there was nothing left above ground except the arch of the great east window of the choir, a fragment called the kitchen, forming the side of a cottage, and a portion of the gate-house. "The arch." Mr. Ward tells us in his exhaustive work, "Dale and its Abbey," "owes its preservation to a tradition, that so long as it stood the parish would be exempt from tithes; and on this account a portion of the highway rate was devoted to its restoration about fifty years ago."

In 1878-9, under the auspices of the "Derbyshire Archæological and Natural History Society," the site was excavated and the greater part of the ground plan laid bare, including the foundations of the choir, lady chapel, transepts, the two south chapels, chapter-room, and parts of the parlour or common-room and nave. The abbey church is shown to have been cruciform in plan, with central tower rising from the intersection of the transepts. Its total length was about 214 feet, and across the transepts 100 feet. The nave had one aisle of three bays, and was 90 feet in length, whilst the choir measured 93 feet.

*A facsimile is given in Trueman's "History of Ilkeston."

The tower basement, between the choir and nave, measured 30 feet from pillar to pillar. There were six altars in the church, viz., the High Altar, and those dedicated to the Blessed Virgin, Our Lady of Pity, the Holy Rood, St. Margaret, and St. Werburgh. The basement of the High Altar remained in situ, as also did those of the altar of Our Lady and of St. Margaret. Numerous sculptured stones were unearthed, and a large portion of pavement, laid with encaustic tiles, disposed in bands for the arrangement of processions. These tiles were manufactured by the monks, who had a kiln situated immediately outside the gate, the site of which was discovered about thirty years ago; and the tiles then found were broken up to mend the road. The tiles unearthed during the excavations are generally much worn; but Mr. John Ward, F.S.A., has succeeded in distinguishing more than sixty different patterns. "Their designs," he observes, "are, as a rule, of great beauty, and some are extremely grotesque. Amongst the heraldic ones occur the ancient arms of England and France quarterly, of the Earls of Lancaster and Leicester, of Ferrers, Grey, Cantelupe, Montford (?), Woodboro, Ross, Morley, Zouch, Mauley, Dispenser, Deincourt, &c." Of sepulchral relics the most interesting was an effigy of a canon in cassock and rocket, holding a book to his breast. Opinions differ as to what office he held, whether canon, lector, abbot, or prior. Beneath the effigy was found the massive oak coffin, sound and perfect, in which reposed a skeleton, on a bed of leaves still green and pliant, although some 500 years must have sped away since they were plucked from the trees. The only fragment of the ruins remaining above ground is the eastern wall of the choir with its fine pointed window, 45 feet in height, and 17 feet 3 inches in width. The beautiful tracery is gone, and it is now only a yawning void, but long may it remain as a memento of the noble abbey church that once graced the Dale.

The abbey stands amidst picturesque surroundings, but the thick volumes of smoke that issue from the chimney of a neighbouring colliery detract much from the beauty of the scene, and remind us that the place is no longer sacred to solitude.

The following description of the Hermitage we borrow from Mr. Kerry's Hermitages of Depedale, reprinted from the "Reliquary," Vol. XXI:—

"The Hermitage is excavated in an elevation of soft sandstone, which forms the southern boundary of the Dale. It consists at the present time of one apartment, measuring about six yards by three, which is entered by a doorway between two window holes. One of these (the western) has been formed out of a doorway; and there can be no doubt that originally the cell was divided into two compartments, the one towards the west forming the oratory, and the other, with the present doorway and adjacent window east of it, the ordinary abode of the hermit. From the description of the Hermitage in the Chronicle of Dale, it seems that the hermit built his altar 'towards the south;' that is opposite the door of the oratory. From this it must be inferred that the smaller of the two apartments (the one to the west, with the half-blocked doorway) was the room set apart for devotion, the narrowness of the place preventing the usual eastward arrangement. Close by, in the western wall, may still be seen a niche, as if for a lamp or some such thing. There is a similar niche, with a small oil dish for a light, hewn in its stone sill, in the narrow oratory of St. Cuthbert's, beneath Hexham Abbey Church. There are other holes here and there in the walls, which, it is to be feared, are of no great antiquity, for the place has served other purposes than those of austere seclusion and devotion. About seventy years ago, it was actually occupied by one of the inhabitants of the village during the rebuilding of his cottage, and here, too, he erected his stocking-frame! But this is not all; in this very place his wife presented her spouse with a son! The fireplace was constructed in the N.E. corner, and the careful observer may discover the blocked chimney-vent. The 'stopping' has been judiciously done, and time has harmonised the work with its surroundings."

As an instance of the greater toleration that has sprung, and is springing from our 19th century enlightenment we may state that on the 1st of May, 1891, Mass was said for the first time since the Reformation in the Hermit's Cave, and that on the following Whit-Monday Pontifical Mass was said in the Abbey ruins by the Bishop of Nottingham for the first time since the dissolution of the Abbey.

The village of Dale Abbey is delightfully situated in a pretty valley, six miles east from Derby, three south-west from Ilkeston, and about $1\frac{1}{4}$ from West Hallam station, on the Great Northern railway. It retains much of its picturesque old-world appearance, and is a delightful place for a day's ramble. Suitable accommodation can be obtained at the Carpenter's Arms, where teas and other refreshments can be provided for parties, either large or small, on the shortest notice. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a curious and interesting structure. Under the same roof, and forming part of the same building, is a dwelling-house—the Church House. This was rebuilt a few years ago—the old one then removed, it is said, had been an inn, and communicated with the church by a door, through which the worshippers were in the habit of passing stealthily to refresh themselves, until the scandal became so great that the communication was blocked up. Another peculiarity is an upper chamber extending over the whole area except the chancel, and serving the purpose of a gallery, from which a door formerly led to the public-house above-mentioned. Two framework screens, from which the panels have long been removed, standing at right-angles to each other, divide the aisle and chancel from the nave. The rickety old oak pulpit, the odd collection of high-backed pews and benches, and the whole internal appearance cannot fail to strike the beholder with amazement. “The eccentricities of this diminutive church do not end here. It has,” observes Mr. Ward, “a bishop's throne—a relic of extra-episcopal times, when the Earls of Stanhope were lay bishops of the parish: it is a massive arm-chair of very domestic type, all aglare with paint and varnish, and decorated with scrolls and scallop shells.” On a neat marble tablet is inscribed:—“Erected by the parishioners of Dale Abbey, to the memory of the Right Hon. Philip Henry, Earl of Stanhope, lord of the manor and lay bishop of this church, who died March 2nd, 1855, aged 73.” As to the origin of this curious ecclesiastical edifice nothing is known with certainty. There is reason, however, to believe that this was the chapel erected by the “Gomme of the Dale,” and which probably adjoined the oratory built by the hermit. It is evidently of very great antiquity, and persons well qualified to judge see in it traces of Early English work. A few fragments of 15th century stained glass remain in the windows, and the incised sepulchral slab bears the date 1532. The living is a chaplaincy without a stipend, in the gift of the Earl of Stanhope, whose ancestors purchased the manor in the 18th century, and held in conjunction with the rectory of Stanton-by-Dale.

The Wesleyans have a small chapel in the village, founded in 1791. This building was nearly destroyed by fire in 1844, and afterwards rebuilt. It was again rebuilt in 1892.

DENBY.

This is an extensive and populous parish in the hundred of Morleston and Litchurch; petty sessional division of Smalley; union and county court district of Belper; and deanery of Duffield. It is under the control of a parish council of seven members, and also elects two guardians and rural district councillors. The total extent of the parish, according to the Ordnance Survey, is 2,442 acres; the ratable value is £9,755, and the population, in 1891, was 1,533. W. D. N. Lrury-Lowe, Esq., is lord of the manor and principal landowner; the other proprietors are the trustees of Richard Strelley, Denby Iron and Coal Co., the Rev. Joseph Woolley, Peter Turner, Samuel Stone, and William Thomas Barber.

The parish lies at the southern extremity of the Midland coalfield, and two seams—Kilburne and Tupton—are extensively worked. Associated with the coal are fireclays of excellent quality, and also bands of ironstone. From the former are manufactured the stone bottles and earthenware for which Denby has long been famous. There are 26 ovens, and about 400 hands are employed.

The manor of Denby, at the time of the Domesday Survey, belonged to Ralph de Buron, under whose family it was held in the reign of Henry I. by Patrick Rossel. William Briwere had some lands here in the reign of King John; but the greater part of the manor remained in the possession of the Rossels till the reign of Henry VI., when it passed, by the marriage of the heiress, to Lawrence Lowe, sergeant-at-law, whose descendants were long seated at Denby previous to their removal to Locko Park. Their residence was at the Old Hall.

Richard Lord Grey of Codnor had a small manor in Denby, granted to him by William Rossel and William Bernack, representatives and coheirs of John de Denby. This estate, subsequently known as Park Hall, passed from the Greys to the Frechevilles, and was purchased by Vincent Lowe in the early part of the reign of Henry VIII. He settled it on his younger son; and on the death of Francis, without issue, in 1564, Jasper Lowe, of Park Hall, succeeded to the Denby estates, and they have since continued united. Park Hall is situated near the western border of the parish, and near it, in Street lane, running north and south are traces of the old Roman road.

The village, long and straggling, is situated about three miles E. from Belper, $7\frac{1}{2}$ from Derby, and one mile from the station of its own name on the Ripley branch of the Midland railway. It is a place of considerable antiquity, having been one of the settlements effected by the Danish rovers during the Saxon Heptarchy. It had apparently attained to some importance in the early part of the 14th century, and was privileged with a weekly market on Thursdays and a fair of two days at the feast of the Nativity of the Blessed Virgin, granted to Richard de Grey of Codnor. These are now obsolete, but the feast is still held on the first Sunday in September. The church, dedicated to the Blessed Virgin Mary, is an ancient edifice consisting of chancel, nave, aisles, south porch, and a tower with spire at the west end, containing four bells. It underwent restoration, or rather mutilation, in 1838, when the north arcade was taken down, and a gallery erected, another gallery being built at the west end, blocking up the tower. A flat plastered ceiling was added at the same time, concealing the previous open timbered roofs, and all the ancient heraldic glass was destroyed. The spire was struck by lightning on the 16th December, 1852, and £160 was spent in repairing the damage. The two rounded arches of the south aisle are Norman work; and the arcade, removed in 1838, is assigned by Dr. Cox to Saxon date. The fabric appears to have been very extensively restored in the 14th century, when the Decorated Gothic style prevailed. The sedilia and piscina, with ogee crocketed canopies, remain in the south wall of the chancel. The east window, given by Mrs. Eckersley in memory of Robert Strelley of Wainsgrove Hall, consists of four lights, in which are representations of the Baptism, Crucifixion, Resurrection, and Ascension of Our Lord.

In the east wall of the south aisle is a shallow panelled recess, where, probably, a side altar stood. Against the north wall of the chancel is an elaborate and costly monument on which are two full-sized figures, a man and woman in kneeling attitude, and in the background are their four children. No inscription now remains, but the two shields of arms which surmounted the monument show that it commemorates one of the Lowe family. There are several marble tablets to other members of the family; amongst them is one to Mrs. Ann Drury-Lowe, who died in 1848, at the age of 104.

The living is a vicarage worth £198 yearly, in the gift of W. Drury-Lowe, Esq., and held by the Rev. James Mockler, M.A., since 1845.

The School was founded and endowed by Jane Massie, in 1728. In 1838, a plot of land containing 37a. 1p. was conveyed to trustees for the benefit of the school. There is accommodation for 210 children. Schools have also been recently erected at Smithy Houses for 150 children. There are Wesleyan chapels at Denby Bottles and Denby Common.

A little west of the village is a portion of the old Roman Rykneld street, locally called Street Lane.

Denby is said to have been the birth-place of John Flamsteed, the Astronomer Royal, whose researches laid the foundation of Newton's immortal discovery of gravitation. He early displayed his mathematical genius, and, in 1669, calculated an eclipse which was to happen the next year. In 1674, he was appointed Astronomer Royal, and the following year took up his residence at Greenwich Observatory, just then completed, and called, after him, Flamsteed House. His principal work, published in 1725, six years after his death, was "Historia Cœlestis Britannica."

Smithy Houses is a small village $1\frac{1}{2}$ miles S.W. from Denby.

HEANOR.

Heanor is an extensive and prosperous parish, lying on the border of Nottinghamshire. The ecclesiastical boundaries also include the township or civil parish of Shipley. Heanor embraces an area of 1,570 acres, and is valued for rating purposes at £30,043. The inhabitants, in 1891, numbered 9,779. It is in the hundred of Morleston and Litchurch, petty sessional division of Smalley, county court district of Belper, union of Basford, deanery of Alfreton, and is the head of a division for the election of a county councillor. The principal land-owners are A. E. M. Mundy, Esq., J.P., Shipley Hall; George B. Gregory, Heanor; William Smith, Esq., J.P., Langley Mill; H. H. Smith, Langley Mill; The Butterley Company, Limited, &c.

The manor, as parcel of that of Codnor, was held, at the time of the Domesday Survey, by Warner, under William Peveril, illegitimate son of the Conqueror. Subsequently the manor was forfeited to the Crown, and was given by King John to Sir Henry de Grey, who fixed his residence at Codnor. The last of the Greys of Codnor died in 1496, and his estates descended to his relative, Sir John Zouch, in whose family they remained till 1634, when they were sold to Dr. Neile, Archbishop of York, and his son, Sir Paul Neile. The next owner was Sir Streyntsham Master, who purchased this and other estates in 1692, and they remained in the possession of his descendants until sold in recent years.

The parish lies on the coal measures, and has generally a fertile soil. The surface is undulating, and from the elevated points some lovely views are obtained; but Heanor has lost many of its rural charms since it became a little hive of industry.

The town, which has risen to considerable importance in recent years, consists of a number of good streets, lined with well-built houses and a goodly array of shops. It is situated on the Derby and Mansfield road, nine miles N.E. from the former place, and 10 miles from Nottingham. Both the Great Northern and Midland railways pass through the parish, and have stations conveniently situated for the town. A local board was established in 1854, and one of its first works was to provide an efficient water supply, on which about £16,000 has been expended. The reservoir has a capacity of 220,000 gallons. Gas works were erected in 1855 by Mr. John King. The Langley Mill and Heanor Gas Light and Coke Co., Ltd., was established in 1868, and works erected at Langley Mill, from which gas is supplied to several neighbouring villages. There are upwards of 20 miles of mains. A market was formerly held here, but no charter for it is

ant. It was revived in 1888, and a market place formed on a part of the old hall. The market is held on Saturday, and a fair on the Thursday Martinmas Day. The Town Hall, in which are located the public offices, erected in 1867 at a cost of £2,000. An ornamental fountain of cast iron, lighted by a lamp, was erected in the market place at a cost of about £40, in commemoration of Her Majesty's Jubilee, in 1887.

Coal mining, and the manufacture of lace and hosiery, are the principal trades. The coal mines of Heanor were worked at an early period; and to obtain a more expeditious and less expensive means of transit, an Act of Parliament was obtained in 1777 for the construction of the Erewash Canal, which was completed in 1779 at a cost of £25,000. Messrs. J. and R. Morley employ about 1,000 hands in the manufacture of hosiery, and 120 are employed in the lace factory of Messrs. John Fletcher and Sons.

There was a church at Heanor at the time of the Domesday Survey. The church, dedicated to St. Laurence, is a handsome edifice of cut stone, on a knoll, and consists of chancel, nave, north and south aisles, and an ancient western tower with pinnacles. The tower is a good specimen of 15th-century work; the rest of the structure was entirely rebuilt in the Perpendicular style in 1868, at a cost of £6,100. On a board in the tower it is recorded that the old church probably dated from the 12th century, and that the present church was built in 1454. There is a peal of five bells, one of which bears the following couplet:—

"Tole the tune that dul evill is to such as livd amisse, But sweete my sownd seems unto them that hope for oifull blisse."

The words "Dul evill," in the first line, are doubtless the mistake of some ignorant person for dismal. The east window of five lights is a memorial of the late Frederick Corfield, rector of the parish, who died in 1879. A window in the north aisle commemorates Joseph Barrow, Ann (his wife), and James, son of the late Ann and her first husband, Samuel Woolley. There are several hand-some monuments in the church to the Wrights of Osmaston, the Suttons of Hall, the Mundys of Shipley, the Woolleys, Roystons, and other families, the most interesting one is that to the memory of Samuel Watson, a celebrated poet, and native of this parish, who is supposed to have executed much of the poetry at Chatsworth usually attributed to Grinlin Gibbons. Inscribed on the monument are the following lines:—

"Watson is gone, whose skilful art display'd
To the very life whatever Nature made;
View but his wondrous works in Chatsworth Hall,
Which are so gazed at and admired by all,
You'll say 'tis a pity he should hidden lie,
And nothing said to revive his memory.
My mournful friends, forbear your tears,
For I shall rise when Christ appears."

This Samuel Watson died 29th March, 1715, aged 53 years."

The oldest monument is one to the Parkes family, of Knotcross, in Ashover, dated 1626; another commemorates Prudence, "wife of Thos. Burton, of Heanor, who died in 1679; and a third, John Clarke, of Codnor, who died in 1688:—

"God crowned his life with length of dayes,
His age with strength (to Him be praise);
He gave him lands and riches store,
Which he bequeath'd to friends and poore;
They have his goodes, his corpse this stone
Doth hide, his soule to Heaven is gone."

The north aisles are separated from the nave on each side by four large and lofty arches, and one of smaller dimensions at the west end. At the east end of the church is a transept or chapel. That on the north side is appropriated to the Mundy family, built by Brindley and Foster, of Sheffield, in 1874, at a cost of £500. The south transept are several monuments of the Mundy family. The tower was restored in 1886, at a cost of £200; and the walls of the chancel and aisles were redecorated a few years ago at an expense of £300. The registers date from 1558, and contain some quaint entries.

The church appears to have been originally subordinate to or dependent on the ancient church of St. Mary in Derby, and was given by the Conqueror to Burton Abbey. For some reason or other it subsequently reverted to the Crown, and was included in King John's grant of the manor to Sir Henry de Grey. The last Lord Grey, in 1473, appropriated the tithes to the neighbouring Abbey of Dale, and that monastery thenceforth became responsible for the maintenance of the vicar and the poor of the parish. After the dissolution of religious houses the vicarage reverted to the Crown, with whom the patronage remained until a few years ago, when it was purchased by trustees. The living is now a rectory, worth £330 per annum net, in the gift of the above trustees, and held by the Rev. C. E. L. Corfield, M.A., since 1866.

For the convenience of the residents of the populous districts of Langley Mill and Aldecar, a chapel-of-ease, dedicated to St. John, has been erected at the latter place; and a Mission Church of corrugated iron was built a few years ago in the village of Marlpool.

Methodism was introduced into Heanor in the closing years of last century by preachers from Nottingham. About 1810 a small chapel was built at Tag Hill. The congregation slowly but gradually increased, and in 1836 it was found necessary to provide more accommodation. Vigorous efforts were put forth to raise the necessary funds, and in 1839 the present chapel was built at a cost of £1,005, to seat 600 persons. In 1847 a schoolroom was built at a cost of £346, and the vestries were added twenty years later, at an expense of £363. An organ was purchased for £300 in 1877, and the following year the sum of £130 was spent on the improvement of the school. The interior was handsomely decorated in 1892 at a cost of £70. On the walls are two marble tablets to members of the Smith family, of Heanor Hall. The chapel is in Ripley circuit, and a resident minister has been recently appointed. There is also a Mission Chapel—a temporary structure—in Burnthouse road.

The Primitive Methodists erected their first chapel in 1819. This building was sold, and the present commodious chapel built in 1886, at a cost of £1,100. There are chapels at Langley and at Aldecar belonging to the same sect. The Baptist Chapel was built in 1876, at a cost of £1,300, to supersede one erected in 1849. There is no resident minister. The Baptists have another chapel at Langley Mill. The old Primitive Methodist chapel is now used as a barracks by the Salvation Army, which "opened fire" in Heanor on the 11th of June, 1887. The United Methodist Free Church, built in 1867, is a neat two-storey building, comprising chapel and school. It will accommodate 350 worshippers, and is in Riddings circuit. There is another chapel at Langley Mill belonging to the same sect. The Friends' Meeting house is a plain brick building, erected in 1834. In the space in front of the chapel lie buried Thomas and Phoebe Howitt, parents of William Howitt, the author and poet, who was born here at Heanor in 1795. In 1823 he married Mary Botham, of Uttoxeter, also a member of the Society of Friends, and a lady of refined literary tastes. They jointly and separately published numerous books, the first being "Forest Minstrelsy and other Poems," issued soon after their marriage. Books on various subjects came rapidly from their pens, and in 1846 Mr. Howitt published a magazine called "Howitt's Journal," as a rival of the "People's Journal," which he had previously edited; but neither publication proved successful. In 1852, accompanied by his two sons and another friend, he sailed for Australia, where for some time he worked at the gold diggings, and subsequently published his experiences and observations under the title of "Land, Labour, and Gold." On his return to England he wrote the "Illustrated History of England" for Messrs. Cassell & Co.. Some of his other productions were "The Boy's Country Book," "Visits to Remarkable Places," "Book of the Seasons," "Colonization and Christianity," and a "Popular History of Priestcraft." He and his wife settled at Rome, where he died in 1879, and she in 1890.

Ample provision has been made for educational purposes without recourse to the rates, thus obviating the infliction of a school board. There are nine schools in the parish, situated at Heanor, Aldecar, Langley Mill, and Marlpool, attended by 2,400 children. The school premises and the instruction given are fully up to the requirements of the Government, and in the results obtained these schools rank among the best in the county. Evening continuation schools have also been established. Another educational institution of inestimable value is the Technical School for Heanor and district, which is under the control of the Urban District and County councils. It was established in 1893, and is held in the old picturesque mansion known as Heanor Hall, which has been converted into a comfortable school. The object of the instruction here given is "to train the mind to remember, and to think; the eye to see, and to grasp detail; and the hand to execute deftly whatever the mind wills."

Both political parties have their clubs in the town; and the original village school has been converted into a young men's institute.

A cemetery, under the control of a burial board, was laid out in 1858. There are two mortuary chapels, united in the centre by a tower and spire. Four acres were originally laid out, and six acres were added about two years ago, the total cost being about £3,800.

Langley Mill is a large and thriving village, situated a little east of Heanor. Here was probably the mill mentioned in connection with Heanor in Domesday Book. The old mill has given place to a much larger one, fitted with Anglo-Hungarian rollers, and all the latest machinery. The village is a little hive of industry. The Vulcan Iron Works of Mr. G. R. Turner, established about 40 years ago, give employment to 350 hands. These works have a wide reputation, and castings and other work turned out here are sent to all parts of the world. Stone bottles and household ware are extensively manufactured by Messrs. Calvert and Lovatt, who employ about 150 men, women, and boys. Mr. Hardy employs about 30 hands at his brick works, where red and blue bricks are made by a unique process.

There is a chapel-of-ease here, dedicated to St. John the Evangelist; and there are also several Nonconformist chapels, which have been before mentioned. A Working Men's Educational Institute has been established here. It is in connection with the Derbyshire County Council and the Science and Art Department of South Kensington.

Langley is a village about a quarter-of-a-mile E. of Heanor. Marlpool is the name of another village on the Ilkeston road, a little S.E. of Heanor, and extending into the township of Shipley.

LOCAL WORTHIES.—Watson (the sculptor) and William Howitt (the literateur) have been already noticed. The Rev. Gervase Smith, D.D., was born at Langley in 1821, and received his early education at Heanor school, kept by Mr. Roscoe. He entered the Wesleyan ministry, and was afterwards chosen president of the Wesleyan Conference. He died in 1882. Another name of local repute is that of the late Nathan Ball, who died in 1892, at the early age of 27. He was the son of Mr. N. C. Ball, postmaster, whom he assisted in the office. He was a young man of studious habits, and possessed of more than average ability. A great deal of his time he devoted to the study of antiquities and historic subjects, and was a Fellow of the Royal Historical Society. He wrote the "History of Our Parish," which ran through several monthly issues of the "Heanor Parish Magazine." He contributed to the "Derbyshire Archaeological and Natural History Society's Journal," and published a little historical sketch of Codnor Castle.

HORSLEY.

Horsley is a parish and township, containing 1,295 acres, including 87 acres of woodland, belonging chiefly to R. S. W. Sitwell, Esq., lord of the manor, who holds a court yearly about the middle of August at the Coach and Horses public-house. The ratable value is £2,624, and the population in 1891 was 368. It is in the hundred of Morleston and Litchurch, petty sessional division of Smalley, county court district and union of Belper, and deanery of Duffield. The soil is clay and sand, and upwards of two-thirds of it is laid down in pasture. The subsoil is gritstone, which is extensively quarried at Coxbench and Castle Quarry, and a seam of coal is worked from Kilburn Colliery.

Horsley was at an early period identified with the Burons (afterwards Byron), ancestors of the illustrious poet. Ralph de Buron held this, with other manors in Derbyshire and Nottinghamshire, at the time of the Domesday survey. A little later a castle was erected, called Horestan Castle, which became the chief seat of the early Byrons. William de Ferrers, Earl of Derby, was appointed governor of this castle by King John in the last year of his reign, and the Pipards held the same office under Edward I. John de Holland, third son of Thomas, Earl of Kent, had a grant of this castle for life from Richard II. In 1457 Edmond Tudor, Earl of Richmond, died seized of the castle of Horestan and lordship of Horsley, and he was succeeded by his son, Henry Tudor, Earl of Richmond, afterwards King Henry VII. The property remained with the Crown till 1514, when it was granted to the Duke of Norfolk in reward for his brilliant victory over the Scots at Flodden Field. Subsequently it came into the possession of the Stanhope family, and was purchased from the Earl of Chesterfield by the grandfather of the present owner. The castle was standing in the reign of Elizabeth, but when or by whom it was destroyed is not known. It was more a fortress than a residence, and was protected by a moat. The site was extensively quarried away last century, and a mere fragment of the ruins now remains to perpetuate its memory.

The village is situated on the Derby and Alfreton road, six miles N. from Derby, three S.E. from Belper, and one mile from Coxbench station, on the Midland Railway, which intersects the parish. The church (St. Clement) is an ancient edifice of stone, consisting of chancel, nave with north and south aisles, south porch, and a lofty tower and spire at the west end. It stands on a commanding eminence, and is a conspicuous object in the landscape for miles around. The earliest mention of the church is in the reign of Stephen, when it was given by Hugh de Buron to the priory of Lenton, in Nottinghamshire; but few traces of this early edifice now remain. The tower and spire, in the Decorated style, date from about 1350, and about a century later the nave and chancel were extensively restored in the Perpendicular style. In 1858-60 the church underwent a thorough restoration, at an expense of £2,220. The upper part of the spire was rebuilt, and the whole fabric re-roofed, re-paved, and re-seated. The restoration was carried out in a most praiseworthy and conservative manner, and any portions rebuilt are exact copies of the original. The east window of the chancel was erected by Mr. Joseph Davenport, of Derby, in memory of his grandfather, the Rev. Samuel Davenport, a former vicar of the parish. A pictorial window, at the east end of the south aisle, commemorates Mrs. Slater, of Castle Farm, and her daughter; and another, in the south wall, representing the Raising of the Widow's Son, is an in memoriam, erected by the present vicar. There are memorials of the Hunter family, of Kilburn, and of the Johnsons, of Coxbench. The tower contains a peal of five bells, four of which are of 17th century date. The fifth one was presented by Mr. George Slater in 1887. The register dates from 1558. The living is a vicarage, worth £300 yearly, in the gift of R. S. W. Sitwell, Esq., and held by the Rev. G. Thompson, M.A., Oxon.

The National School dates from 1828, and is attended by 118 children of both sexes. There are four scholarships, worth £2 each yearly, granted to this school from Richardson's Charity—(See Smalley).

The Derby Canal Co.'s tram line passes through the township. It was the first of the kind constructed in England, and was originally known as Outram's line, from Mr. Outram, the inventor and engineer. The name was subsequently curtailed into tram line.

There is a tradition that Horsley was the birth-place of Dick Turpin, the highwayman; and Dr. Cox points out that the name Turpin is of frequent occurrence in the parish registers down to the present century.

Coxbench is a small village one mile S. from Horsley. Here is a station on the Midland railway.

KILBURN is a township and civil parish in the ecclesiastical parish of Horsley, containing 900 acres; ratable value, £3,810; and number of inhabitants, 1,427. The landowners are Henry Charles Vicars Hunter, Esq., George Smith Langton, Frederick Kerry Brown, Matthew Smith Langton, W. Drury-Lowe, Esq., J. H. Woolley, Esq., J.P., J. G. Eley, Henry Brown, and William Heath. Coal of good quality is abundant. The seam is about five feet thick, and occurs at a depth of 335 yards. Another seam, two feet thick, is met with 21 yards below the surface. Kilburn coal is largely used in Derby, Belper, and the neighbourhood. About 150 men and boys are employed in the colliery.

The village is situated one mile N. of Horsley, and about a quarter-of-a-mile from the station of its own name, on the Midland railway. Kilburn Hall, an ancient and picturesque mansion, stands within a spacious park on the west side of the village. It is the property of H. C. V. Hunter, Esq., and the residence of Colonel Pedder.

The National School, for girls and infants, was built in 1872, and is attended by over 120 children. For the convenience of the villagers, church service is held here by the vicar. The Wesleyans rebuilt their chapel in 1891, at a cost of £1,160, and it is now almost out of debt. It is a substantial building of brick, capable of seating 350, and at the rear is a commodious and well-attended Sunday School.

The wakes are held on the Sunday following the feast of St. Clement, the patron of the parish church, whilst those of Horsley are regulated by the festival of St. James.

HORSLEY WOODHOUSE.

This is a small civil and ecclesiastical parish, containing 627 acres of land, belonging to R. S. W. Sitwell, Esq., who is also lord of the manor; Wm. Calladine; the Derby Banking Co.; Frank Weston; the Trustees of Jno. Weston; and Jas. Geo. Eley. The ratable value is £2,040, and the number of inhabitants 934, who are chiefly employed in the neighbouring collieries. Frame knitting and nail making were formerly the staple industries; and the latter is still carried on to some extent.

The village is distant four miles S.E. from Belper, six miles N.E. from Derby, and two miles from Kilburn station on the Midland railway. By an order in Council, in the year 1878, this township was detached from Horsley, and formed into an ecclesiastical district. The church, dedicated to St. Susanna, was built the same year, at a cost of £2,000. It is a plain Gothic structure, comprising nave, chancel, north porch, and bell turret containing one bell. The east window is a beautiful piece of stained-glass work, by Burlisson and Grylls, given by R. S. W. Sitwell, in memory of his family. The eagle lectern was the gift of General Hughes, who also gave the pictorial window on the south side of the nave. There is accommodation for 240, and all seats are free. The living is a perpetual curacy, worth £216 yearly with residence, in the gift of R. S. W. Sitwell, Esq., and held by the Rev. A. G. Waldy, M.A., since 1879. A school for girls and infants was built a few years previously by the Rev. H. W. Sitwell.

The Wesleyans and Primitive Methodists have chapels in the village. That belonging to the former body is a spacious structure, with sitting accommodation for 400. The latter is a small plain building, erected in 1851, to seat 150.

Stainsby House, the seat and property of R. S. W. Sitwell, Esq., J.P., is a handsome modern mansion, surrounded by well wooded grounds.

CHARITIES.—Thomas Hunter, in 1735, left a cottage and some land, the rents thereof to be distributed amongst the poor of Alfreton, Kilburn, Horsley, Horsley Woodhouse, Ripley, and Wessington in certain proportions. The share for this parish is now 25s. yearly, which is distributed at Christmas. The sum of £6 yearly is received out of the rent of land left by John Lockoe to the poor of Belper, Kilburn, Horsley, and Horsley Woodhouse. Flannel, to the value of 36s., is distributed out of Gisborne's bequests; and poor or disabled colliers of this parish have a conditional benefit in Samuel Richardson's charity left to Smalley. At present there are three poor colliers in receipt of 25s each per quarter.

Post Office; George Henry Parker, postmaster. Letters, via Derby, are delivered at 7 a.m., and are despatched at 7-10 p.m. Postal Orders are issued, but not cashed. No Sunday business.

Nearest Railway Station, Kilburn (1½ miles). Nearest Telegraph and Money Order Offices, Smalley (1½ miles) and Kilburn (1½ miles).

ILKESTON.

Ilkeston is a parish and flourishing market town and municipal borough situated on the west bank of the river Erewash, which divides this county from Nottinghamshire. It is in the hundred of Morleston and Litchurch; petty sessional division of Smalley; county court district of Belper; Basford Union; and is the head of a deanery. The Duke of Rutland is lord of the manor, and his Grace and Lord Belper are the principal landowners. A court leet is held at the Rutland Hotel yearly on Easter Tuesday.

From the Domesday Book we learn that this manor, then called Tilchestune, belonged to Gilbert de Gand, under whom it was held by Malger. A portion of it was held by the King's thanes. Gilbert de Gand, who was the Conqueror's nephew, subsequently gave the manor to his seneschal, Robert de Muskham. Hugh FitzRalph held two parts of a knight's fee in Ilkeston, and, in 1251, had a grant of a market and fair, the former to be held on Thursday, and the latter on the vigil and feast of the Assumption (August 15th). The Muskham line, after four descents, ended in an heiress who married Sir Ralph de Gresley. The daughter of the latter, and eventually heiress of her brother, brought the manor to Nicholas de Cantelupe. The male line of this family terminated in 1376, and William, Lord Zouch of Harringworth, inherited the estate through his descent from Millicent, one of the coheiresses of William de Cantelupe. His descendant, John Lord Zouch, fought on the side of Richard III. at the battle of Bosworth Field, in 1485, for which his estates were confiscated and given by Henry VII. to Sir John Savage. They passed through several generations of this family to Sir Thomas Savage, who, in 1608, sold this manor to Sir John Manners, ancestor of his Grace the Duke of Rutland.

On the east side of the town, near the stone bridge that crosses the river Erewash, there formerly stood a gallows, the history of which is involved in obscurity. Woolley, in his MS. History of Derbyshire, supposes that the ancient lords of Ilkeston had the privilege of executing criminals. Another account is that the assizes were transferred from Nottingham to Ilkeston in consequence of the plague; and the inhabitants were half-toll free at all fairs and markets in the kingdom on condition of keeping in repair the gallows for the execution of malefactors. This privilege was known as the "Gaunt fee," and is said to have been granted by John of Gaunt, though it does not appear that that nobleman ever had any connection with or interest in Ilkeston. This vulgar error has doubtlessly arisen from a confusion of the de Gands, early owners with the famous John of Gaunt, Duke of Lancaster. Every vestige of the gallows has long disappeared, but the gruesome instrument of death was still standing when Glover wrote his History of Ilkeston in 1831.

The town is built on the slope of a hill on the bank of the Erewash, eight miles from Nottingham, nine miles from Derby, and is accessible either by the Great Northern or Midland railways. The borough boundary, which is coterminous with that of the parish, encloses an area of 2,526 acres, and includes the hamlets of Cotmanhay and Little Hallam. There has been a gradual but not inconsiderable increase in the population and material prosperity of Ilkeston in each succeeding decade of the present century, as the following figures show :—

YEAR.	POPULATION.	YEAR.	POPULATION.	YEAR.	POPULATION.
1801.....	2,422	1831.....	4,446	1861.....	8,374
1811.....	2,970	1841.....	5,323	1871.....	9,662
1821.....	4,681	1851.....	6,122	1881.....	14,119

In 1891 the population of the borough amounted to 19,744. In 1823 the total rental of the parish was £4,560; in 1856 the ratable value was £9,486, in 1879 it had risen to £32,248; and the present ratable value of the borough is £57,832.

A local board, or urban sanitary authority, was elected in 1864, and the parish remained under the control of that body till 1887, when it was created a municipal borough by Royal charter. The corporate body consists of a mayor, six aldermen, and 18 councillors, six for each of the three wards into which the borough was to be divided. The election of the first town council took place on the 2nd of May, and the election of mayor on the 9th, when the honour fell on Mr. Francis Sudbury. The income of the municipal authority, excluding bonus, is £2,400, and the total expenditure £2,320. The corporation offices are in the Town Hall, a commodious structure of brick, erected by the local board, in 1866, at a cost of £4,000. The site was previously occupied by thatched cottages, and their removal and erection of the hall has greatly improved the appearance of the Market Place. The chartered market is held on Thursday; but this is little more than a name, as almost all the business is now transacted on Saturday. Gas Works were erected in 1848, at a cost of £2,500; and Water Works were constructed in 1856, at a cost of £3,000, raised in £1 shares. Both these works were purchased by the local board, the former in 1879, and the latter in 1878, and are now in the hands of the Corporation.

Ilkeston is both a mining and manufacturing town. Situated just within the southern limits of the Midland coalfield, it derives much of its prosperity from the collieries so extensively worked in the neighbourhood, and from its proximity to Nottingham it shares in the manufacturing industries of that town. The lace and hosiery manufactures are of considerable magnitude, and give employment to a large number of hands. The manufacture of the needles used in all kinds of lace, hosiery and knitting machines is also extensively carried on. The business was established here in 1824, by the late Mr. Benjamin Tatham, and he was, we believe, the first to use steel wire in their production. There are also several other industries of minor importance.

Saturday is the principal market day, when large numbers of people from the neighbouring villages flock into the town; and a fair is held on the first Thursday after October 11th. There are four branch banks for the convenience of business men and others, and several hotels for the accommodation of visitors. Of these, the principal are the Rutland Hotel and the "Sir John Warren." The former is much frequented by commercial men and tourists. Adjoining it is the Football Ground, one of the finest in the county.

PLACES OF WORSHIP.—The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is an ancient structure, consisting of chancel, with side chapel, nave, north and south aisles, organ chamber, vestry on the north side of chancel, and western tower. Though there is no record of its erection, ecclesiologists are able to approximate the dates of the various parts by the style of architecture and ornamentation. According to these authorities a church must have been founded here towards the end of the 12th century, when the Norman style was merging into the Early English. The three lofty arches of the south aisle belong to this period, and are without doubt the oldest part of the fabric. The north arcade was rebuilt in the Decorated style about a century later, and the spacious chancel appears to belong to the same period. The original tower, which was surmounted by a leaded spire, was destroyed by a hurricane in 1714, and rebuilt in 1731, with the lamentably bad taste that characterised the architecture of the period. A chantry chapel that stood on the north side of the chancel, from which it was separated by three arches, was in consequence of its dilapidated condition taken down the same year, and for some reason or other not rebuilt. This chapel is supposed to have been the chantry founded about 1360 by Joan, the widow of Nicholas de Cantelupe, for five priests, and dedicated to St. Peter the Apostle. A thorough restoration of the church took place in 1855, on which about £4,000 was expended. The work was carried out in a reverent and conservative manner from the plans of Mr. Walker, pupil of the elder Pugin; as much of the old work as possible was retained, and all the old features reproduced wherever feasible. The chantry chapel was rebuilt in its original style; and a vestry was erected on the south side of the chancel, where there remained some traces of a former one. The dilapidated and insecure state of the aisles rendered necessary their removal and re-erection. About £1,000 has been spent since 1888 in further restoration and improvements. The roof of the nave has been thoroughly repaired, an organ chamber built, a new organ purchased, the chantry chapel arranged for daily services, and the chancel laid with tiles. Dr. Cox regrets the extensive alterations that were made in the church in 1855; but we believe that no part was rebuilt where the old work could by any possibility be retained. Mr. Trueman, in his valuable "History of Ilkeston," says:—"Few people who knew anything of the deplorable state of the church prior to its restoration will have any sympathy with Dr. Cox's opinions, or share in his regret that tottering and dangerous walls have given place to solid and substantial structures;" and he further observes that "Ilkeston can boast of many architectural gems, which (thanks to the restoration of 1854-5) have not only been carefully preserved, but, in some instances, have had given to them again some of their ancient pristine beauty." A few of these we may refer to. The three sedilia and double piscina are remarkably fine pieces of ancient work, the tracery of the former being particularly chaste and elegant. Another architectural gem is the arcade dividing the chantry chapel from the chancel. This was fortunately left entire when the chantry fell, and was walled up. In 1855 the chantry was rebuilt in the original style, and this arcade reopened and restored. The clustered pillars of the arches have capitals profusely ornamented with foliage, which, at each corner, is so arranged as to give a quaint representation of the human face. Another object worthy of notice is a very fine stone screen dividing the chancel from the nave. The stone pulpit is modern, as is also the font.

There does not appear to have been much stained glass in the church. Ashmole, writing in 1662, mentions some heraldic glass in the east windows of the north and south aisles, but this disappeared long ago. The east window of the chantry, a reproduction of the 14th century one, has been filled with stained glass at the expense of the present vicar and family.

Many of the old monuments have disappeared, but one or two interesting ones still remain. On the north side of the chancel, under the easternmost arch, is an altar tomb bearing the mail-clad effigy of a cross-legged knight. His feet rest on a lion, and on his left arm is a shield with the Cantelupe arms. The sides of the tomb are panelled into trefoil headed niches, and in the spandrels are uncharged shields. This tomb formerly stood in the centre of the spacious chancel, and is supposed to be that of Nicholas de Cantelupe, the first lord of Ilkeston of that name, who was probably the builder of the chancel. Another Cantelupe monument, relegated to the churchyard at the restoration, has been removed by the present vicar to the vestry under the organ chamber for its better preservation. It is the upper slab of a raised monument, and once bore brasses, the matrices of which remain. Ashmole, who visited the church in 1662, speaking of this tomb, says, "There appears to have been thereon the portraiture of a clergyman in his habit, but the brass is stolen away." The monument is now supposed by competent authorities to be that of William de Cantelupe, son of the above Nicholas, who accompanied Edward I. in his wars in Scotland and France, and died in 1309, seized of the manor of Ilkeston in right of his mother. During some repairs in 1888 the sepulchral brass of Templer Flamstead, a child, who died in 1713, was found under the floor; and about the same time the brass of Benjamin Day, with a long poetical epitaph, who died in 1760, was dug out of the garden, and both have been placed in the church by the vicar.

The living, which was originally a rectory, was conferred by William, Lord Zouch, upon the neighbouring Abbey of Dale in 1386, when a vicarage was ordained. After the dissolution of the abbey the rectorial tithes and the advowson of the vicarage were granted to the Savage family, and now belong to the Duke of Rutland. The living is worth £350 per annum, with residence, and held since 1887 by the Rev. E. M. Evans, M.A.

Holy Trinity Church.—The accommodation provided by the Parish Church had long been insufficient for the increasing population, and the Temperance Hall, in Granby Street, was temporarily utilised for service. This was superseded by the present handsome church, dedicated to the Holy Trinity. It is built of the best Derbyshire gritstone, in the Early English style of architecture, and comprises nave, north and south aisles, organ chamber, vestries, and an imposing east end. The latter, consisting of the chancel, with a morning chapel on the north side, was added in 1888. The church is situated in the northern part of the town, near the Great Northern Station, where there is an industrial population numbering about 6,000, chiefly miners. The site for church, parsonage, and schools was given by His Grace the Duke of Rutland, and the total cost of erection, about £7,000, was raised by subscription, the largest contributors being the Duke of Rutland and E. M. Mundy, Esq., of Shipley Hall. The Incorporated Society for Building, &c., of Churches gave £250. The roof is of high pitch, which gives room for a noble and lofty chancel arch, and two similar but smaller arches separate the chancel from the north chapel. The aisles are divided from the nave by four arches, springing from well-proportioned columns. The east window is a very fine one of five lights. The nave is lighted by windows in the clerestory and in the south aisle, the latter being arranged in couplets. The pulpit and altar are of oak, beautifully carved, and the altar cross, candlesticks, and cover are in harmony with the services of the church. The sacred vessels are of exceptional richness. The church is seated with chairs to accommodate 500, and all are free. The parsonage house, a substantial building a little north of the church, was completed in 1892, at a cost of £2,000. The living is a perpetual curacy, worth £160 per annum, but as yet unendowed, in the gift of the Bishop of Southwell, and held by the Rev. J. E. H. Binney, M.A.

St. John's Church was erected in 1893-4 to supply the wants of the rapidly increasing population of the southern part of the town. It is built on an elevated site, overlooking the Erewash valley, given by the Duke of Rutland. The building comprises nave, south aisle, and porch; but owing to the limited amount at the disposal of the committee a very plain design and the least expensive materials have been adopted.

A church, dedicated to St. Bartholomew, has been erected at Hallam Fields, through the liberality of the Stanton Iron Co., by whom also the curate's stipend is provided.

The Catholic Chapel, in Regent, is a plain edifice, built in 1862, and enlarged by the addition of an apse in 1874. It is dedicated to Our Lady of the Dale.

Nonconformists have long been an important factor in the population of Ilkeston. A paper drawn up by William Longdon, guardian of the poor, in 1824, for presentation to the Bishop of Lichfield and Coventry, and now in the possession of the vicar, states that "The church has only accommodation for about 500, and is without any free sittings. There are no less than six Dissenting places of worship in the parish; two belonging the Methodists, one the Baptists, one the Independents, one the Presbyterians, one the Ranters; altogether offering accommodation for upwards of 1,300. There are two resident Dissenting ministers, one belonging to the Methodists, the other to the Independents.

The Congregational (formerly Independent) Chapel, was erected in 1781, and rebuilt in 1849, at a cost of £900. It is a brick structure, with no architectural pretensions, with gallery, and seated throughout with pitchpine to accommodate 370. On the walls is a marble tablet, to the memory of the Rev. R. Allsebrook, formerly minister, who died in 1863. The Baptist Chapel, in Queen Street, was built in 1858, at a cost of £1,400, to supersede the old chapel in South Street, which dated from 1784. The Unitarians rebuilt their chapel in 1869, at an expense of about £500. One-sixth of the income of Samuel Roe's charity, left in 1776, is paid to the minister of this chapel. The United Methodist Free Church was built in 1845, at a cost of £1,200. It is a spacious edifice, capable of seating 700 persons, and superseded an older one, afterwards used for some time as a Sunday school. A new school was erected in 1864, at a cost of £1,000. The Free Church Methodists have also a chapel, called Ebenezer Chapel, in Awworth Road. The Wesleyan Chapel, Bath Street, was built in 1873; and with the Sunday school attached, and site, cost about £2,500. There are Mission Rooms in Nottingham Road and Station Road. Ilkeston is the head of a circuit which includes sixteen preaching places. The Primitive Methodist Chapel, Bath Street, was erected in 1852, at a cost of £1,300, to seat 600. A considerable change has been effected in its internal and external appearance since its erection. There are extensive schools, with large hall, in Wilmot Street, built in 1888, which have cost the society £3,280. The old chapel, having become too small, was converted into cottages. The Primitive Methodists have also a chapel at Cotmanhay, built in 1853, at a cost of £500; and another on Nottingham Road, erected in 1894. The entire value of the property of the society within the borough is about £7,500. Ilkeston is the head of a circuit which embraces Langley Mill, Stanley Common, and Heanor. The Methodist New Connexion was established here ten or twelve years ago by a few friends favourable to the polity of that society; and the old Wesleyan Chapel, in Market Street, was purchased. Their meetings here were not very successful, and it was felt that either the lingering existence of the society must end, or a new position be found where they were more likely to receive an accession of strength. A site, in Stamford Street, was secured; and in 1889 the present chapel was erected at a total cost, inclusive of the land, of £2,000. It is a neat Gothic structure, comprising nave, side aisles, and an octagonal turret and spire. In the front is a large Gothic window of five lights, formerly in the chapel in Market Street, and the choir gallery and open pews were also taken from the same edifice. There is a melancholy incident connected with this chapel. During a magic lantern entertainment in November, 1892, an explosion occurred, resulting in the loss of life, several serious injuries, and much damage to the building.

The Salvation army has a barracks in the town.

SCHOOLS.—To provide sufficient accommodation, and thus prevent, if possible, the imposition of a school board, new and spacious National schools were built in 1875, at a cost of nearly £4,000. The Catholics erected a school the following year, but these did not satisfy the requirements of the Government, and in 1878 a school board consisting of seven (now nine) members was formed, the election taking place on the 24th of June. The Board did not provide any further accommodation until 1882, when the Granby schools (boys and girls) were erected at a cost of £5,416. These were followed by the Kensington schools (boys, girls, and infants), built in 1884, at a cost of £5,090. In 1889 an extensive range of schools for boys, girls, and infants was erected in Chaucer street, at a cost of £8,012; and a school, for infants only, was built in Cotmanhay Road in 1891, at an expenditure of £4,190.

The Church Institute, situated at the corner of Market Street, is a neat building of brick, erected in 1884, at a cost of £1,400, raised by bazaars and public subscription. It was opened by Lord Egerton of Tatton, April 24th, 1884, and comprises museum, reading, recreation, and billiard rooms in the upper storey, and library, with large lecture-room, coffee tavern, and caretaker's residence on the ground floor.

The Baths.—A mineral spring was discovered many years ago, and for some time it was in considerable repute. Its waters resembled those of Seltzer, in Germany, and were said to be beneficial in various diseases. Baths were erected in 1831, and the adjoining grounds tastefully laid out. For a time they met with a fair share of patronage, but have now been disused for some years. Mining operations interfered with the spring, and the water has entirely ceased to flow.

COTMANHAY is a hamlet and considerable village included in the borough of Ilkeston, and inhabited chiefly by colliers and framework knitters. A church, dedicated to Christ, was erected here in 1848, at a cost of £2,600, raised by subscription, and an ecclesiastical district embracing part of Ilkeston and the adjoining township of Shipley, in the parish of Heanor, was allotted to it. It is a neat edifice of stone, in the Early English style, and consists of nave, with side aisles, and small octagonal bell turret rising from front gable. The interior was very artistically decorated in 1867, and is rich in gold and colour. The east window, of three lights, representing various scenes in the life of our Saviour, is a memorial of the Rev. E. W. Symons, M.A., the first incumbent, who died in 1857. The windows of the clerestory are in triplets; those of the aisles are single lancet lights. Two of these—one in each aisle—were inserted by Mr. Joseph Shorthose; and two in the north aisles depicting St. Michael and the Dragon, and the Virgin and Child, beautifully executed by Mr. Kempe, of London, are the tributes of affection from the three daughters of the late Mr. and Mrs. Mundy, of Shipley Hall. The organ, erected in 1878 at a cost of £300, is also a memorial of the same worthy couple. At the east end of the church, under a handsome marble tomb, is the vault of the Mundy family. The church will accommodate 600, and all seats are free. The living is a vicarage worth £200 a year, with residence, in the gift of E. M. Mundy, Esq., whose father endowed it with £1,500, and held by the Rev. E. T. S. Fowler, M.A., since 1858.

The schools, in connection with the church, are situated at Shipley.

The Free Church Methodists have a chapel at Cotmanhay.

Little Hallam is a hamlet and village included in the borough of Ilkeston.

A LOCAL NOTORIETY.—Samuel Taylor, the Ilkeston giant, was born at Little Hallam, in this parish, in 1816. When only ten years of age he measured five feet ten inches; at twelve he was six feet four inches, and at fourteen he stood only two inches under seven feet. When sixteen years of age he was engaged by a travelling showman, and exhibited as a giant of seven feet four inches. He subsequently took to the "show bizness" on his own account, and traversed the country exhibiting in towns and villages. In 1875 he met with an accident near Oldham which, eventually, resulted in his death. His body was brought by rail to Ilkeston for interment, and a large concourse of his native townsmen, headed by a brass band playing the Dead March, joined in the mournful procession to the cemetery, the bells of the parish church playing a muffled peal the while.

NOTE.—For much of the information here given we beg to acknowledge our indebtedness to the Rev. E. M. Evans, M.A., and Mr. E. Trueman, and to those who desire to know more of Ilkeston and its ancient lords, we recommend the perusal of Mr. Trueman's "History of Ilkeston."

KIRK HALLAM.

This parish comprises the township of its own name, and formerly also included Mapperley in the adjoining hundred. Its entire area is returned at 734 acres, ratable value £893, and its population in 1891 was 94. It is in the Morleston and Litchurch hundred, petty sessional division of Smalley, county court district of Belper, union and rural district of Shardlow and deanery of Ilkeston. Francis A. Newdigate, Esq., is lord of the manor and principal owner, and he is also patron of the living.

The name is written Hallun in the Domesday Book. The manor then belonged to Ralph de Buron. A little later it came into the possession of the Sandiacres; and in the 13th century the heiress of this family married one of the younger sons of Sir Henry Grey of Codnor. This branch of the Greys terminated in two daughters, one of whom married John Leake, circa 1400, and Nicholas Leake, Earl of Scarsdale, his descendant, sold the manor and estate to Francis Newdigate, Esq. This gentleman at his death in 1762, left his property to his nephew, Francis Parker, who assumed the surname and arms of Newdigate, from whom it has descended to the present owner.

The village is small but picturesque, and stands $8\frac{1}{2}$ miles E.N.E. from Derby, and one mile from Ilkeston.

The church, dedicated to All Saints, was given by Sir Richard de Sandiacres, together with certain lands and tenements, to the abbot and convent of Dale, the living thenceforth becoming a vicarage, which was generally held by one of the canons of Dale. After the dissolution of the abbey the rectorial tithes and the advowson were granted to Sir Francis Leake, and the patronage has since descended with the manor. The edifice is small, and consists of chancel, nave, and low embattled tower at the west end containing three bells. Of the original Early English church nothing remains except the font and two pieces of beak head moulding built into the south wall. The chancel belongs to the Decorated period, but the tower and nave are of Perpendicular date. The fabric underwent some repairs in 1843, and was more thoroughly restored about seven years later when the nave was re-roofed, the south porch and chancel arch built, and the whole re-seated in modern style. The ancient triple sedilia recesses remain in the south wall of the chancel, and beyond them is a very peculiar piscina, having on each side of it a small niche, the purpose whereof is not known with certainty. The font is said by Dr. Cox to be a relic of the church that was erected here shortly after the Norman Conquest. There are several marble monuments and stained glass windows to the memory of various members of the Newdigate family. The east window of the chancel by Clayton and Bell is inscribed "To the memory of Francis Newdigate, who died May 21, 1862; this window is erected by his family and tenants." One on the south side is an affectionate tribute to the memory of a dearly-loved wife, erected by Francis W. Newdigate. A window on the south side of the church was erected in 1894 by the parishioners of Kirk Hallam as a token of respect to the memory of Francis Wm. Newdigate, who died in 1893. On a brass plate at the west end of the nave is the following inscription:—

"As here I am so let me lie,
Till Christ shall come and call to me
Rise up and stand before my face
That I and you may now embrace.
Which that I hope and long to see
My dearest Lord who dy'd for me,
And at his coming hope to have
A joyful rising from the Grave.
Which God of his infinite Good ness of mercy grant to me, Amen.
Patrick Rice aged 72, 1766."

At this end of the church also there is a tablet to the memory of James Morrell, who died in 1894, and was for 30 years clerk of this parish. It was erected by his fellow parishioners as a token of respect and esteem. On the gravestone of Samuel Cleater, who died May 1st, 1811, at the age of 65, and lies buried in the churchyard, is the following epitaph, which for sturdy patriotism can scarcely be surpassed:—

"True to his King, his Country was his glory,
When Bony won, he said it was a story.

The living is a vicarage worth £280, with residence, held since 1891 by the Rev. William Blurton, A.K.C.

LONG EATON.

This populous parish and thriving market town is situated at the south-eastern extremity of the county, adjoining Nottinghamshire, from which it is separated by the Trent and the Erewash. It is in the hundred of Morleston and Litchurch, petty sessional division and county court district of Derby, union of Shardlow, and deanery of Ilkeston. The total superficial extent, including 82½ acres of water surface, is 2,098½ acres, and the ratable value, according to the latest assessment, is £45,256. In 1891 the inhabitants numbered 9,636, and now, it is computed, they amount to about 11,000. The freeholders are lords of the manor, the Earl of Harrington having accepted an allotment of eight acres at the enclosure in lieu of manorial rights. The principal landowners are Lord Harrington, Elvaston Castle; Nathaniel Charles Curzon, Esq., Lockington Hall; J. C. Hopkins, 24, Regent's Park, London; S. J. Claye, Ltd.; Charles Spencer Madan, Mansfield; Frederick Martin Madan, Lichfield; Douglas Fox's trustees;

T. J. Birkin, Ruddington, Notts; Robert Holbrook, Barton, Nottingham; Sidney Charles Howitt, Powick, Worcester; the Injector Works, Manchester; and the Long Eaton Co-operative Society.

The town is situated on the Ashby-de-la-Zouch and Nottingham road, seven miles from the latter town, 10 miles from Derby, and is on the Erewash Valley branch of the Midland railway. Trent station, a little south of the town, is an important junction, where about 200 passenger trains stop daily. The town is under the control of an urban council, late local board, by whom many improvements have been effected. Gas works were established in 1853 by private venture, and in 1864 a limited company was formed, which has now a paid-up capital of £30,000. There are two holders, with a united capacity of 320,000 cubic feet, and the gas is sold at 3s. per 1,000 cubic feet. The streets are well drained and lighted, and the principal thoroughfares are lined by many well-arranged shops. A market is held every Saturday, but the fairs have been discontinued. The town is quite a little hive of industry. The lace manufacture is carried on on a scale of considerable magnitude. The Harrington factory, in Leopold street, is an immense four-storey building, lighted by 224 windows on one side. It was opened in 1885, and is said to be the largest lace factory in England. The other factories are mentioned in the directory. Large numbers of the inhabitants are also employed in the Midland railway stores and engine sheds and at the wagon works of S. J. Claye, Ltd.

Long Eaton was formerly a chapelry under Sawley; in 1838 it was made parochial, and exempted from payment towards the repairs of the mother church; and in 1864 it was constituted an independent vicarage. The church, which is dedicated to St. Lawrence, is a good stone edifice, consisting of chancel, nave with north and south aisles, south porch, and a tower at the west end, embattled and surmounted by a low octagonal spire. It was restored, enlarged, and entirely remodelled under the direction of Mr. Street in 1868, at a cost of £3,000. A new nave, chancel, and north aisle were built, and the old nave and chancel were converted into a south aisle and chancel chapel. The inner doorway of the south porch retains its old Norman ornamentation, and is supposed to date from the reign of Stephen. The tower and spire are of the Decorated style which prevailed about the middle of the 14th century. On the south side of the chancel arch is a stone thus inscribed:—

HENRY : HOWIT
IOHN : BARET
CHVR : WARD
1696
CLEARK 55 YE

The aisles are separated from the nave by four arches springing from pillars alternately circular and octagonal. The east window is a large one of five lights, filled with stained glass, representing the Crucifixion in the centre, the visit of the Magi and the Baptism of Christ on the left, and the Resurrection and Ascension on the right. On the north side of the chancel are two double-light windows, filled with stained glass at the expense of the scholars and teachers of the Sunday school and of the night school respectively. The pulpit and font are of Caen stone, and neatly carved. There are very few monuments, and none possessing any special interest. The tower contains a peal of eight bells. There are 587 sittings, all of which are free. The living is a vicarage, worth £300 a year, with residence, in the gift of the Bishop of Southwell, and held by the Rev. Canon J. M. Dolphin, B.A.

St. James' Mission Church, situated on Sawley Road, is a neat edifice of brick, erected in 1886. It will accommodate about 300, and here also all seats are free. The Rev. James Millward is the curate-in-charge.

The Catholics have a small temporary chapel of corrugated iron, erected in 1883, which is served from Nottingham.

Ample chapel accommodation has been provided by the various Nonconformist bodies. The Congregational Church, in Nottingham Road, was erected in 1876, at a cost of £1,600. The building is only half the size provided for in the architect's plans, and can be extended in conformity with the original design whenever the necessary funds are forthcoming. Behind the Chapel are the Sunday schools, built in 1885, at a cost of £500. The Methodist Free Church (Mount Tabor), in the Market Place, is a handsome building of brick ornamented with stone, erected at a cost of £4,000, to seat 850. The Primitive Methodist (Bourne) Chapel, in Claye Street, is a commodious structure, erected in 1873, at a cost of £2,000, exclusive of the site, which was given by S. J. Claye. It is comfortably seated to accommodate 500. In connection with the chapel are extensive Sunday schools in Orchard Street, built in 1878, at an expense of about £1,000, and enlarged in 1891, at a further outlay of £500. The Wesleyan Methodist Chapel at Kirk Field, built in 1882, will accommodate about 700. The General Baptist Chapel, in Station Road, is a neat structure of brick and stone, erected in 1890, to accommodate 450.

Schools.—A School Board was formed in 187 , and the High Street School was opened in May, 1876. There is accommodation for 618 children in the three departments, and an average attendance of 584. The Derby Road Schools were opened in September, 1885. They afford accommodation for 650, and have an average attendance of 638. The Sawley Road Schools, erected in 1892, form a handsome block of buildings, with master's house adjoining. The designs were furnished by Mr. John Sheldon, architect and surveyor, and the work was carried out by Messrs. F. Perks & Son, the total cost being nearly £10,000. There are two departments—mixed and infants, with a total accommodation for 692. Evening continuation classes are held three nights a week during the winter months. Evening classes are also held in St. Lawrence's National School.

A little distance from the town is Trent College, erected in 1867; a superior educational establishment, situated in its own grounds of 21 acres. The College premises comprise a beautiful Chapel; two Reading Rooms for the younger and older boys respectively; two Swimming Baths, outdoor and indoor; Fives Courts; Gymnasium; Laboratory; Workshop, &c. The Dormitories and Schoolrooms are heated throughout with hot water. The course of study includes preparation for the Universities, Civil Service, Army, and other examinations. There are Scholarships for Classics, Mathematics, and Modern Languages, varying in value according to the proficiency of the candidates, from £30 to £10. The religious teaching of the College is based upon the Scriptures, in accordance with the principles of the English Reformation. The Rev. J. Savile Tucker, M.A., Balliol Coll., Oxon., is the head master.

Wellesley College is another high-class educational establishment. The house, which is beautifully situated, was erected at a cost of several thousands, and is specially adapted for scholastic purposes. The curriculum is broad and practical, and includes Divinity, Latin, French, Mathematics, Natural Science, English Grammar, Composition, Literature, Geography, History, Bookkeeping, Shorthand, Arithmetic, Reading, Writing, and Drawing in all its branches.

The Long Eaton Recreation Grounds Co., Ltd., have about thirteen acres of land enclosed for recreation purposes, football, cricket, bowling, tennis, &c. There is a good cycling track, 2½ laps to the mile. The Poor's Close, in Stanley Street, for which the Urban District Council pay £12 yearly, is also used as a recreation ground.

The poetic muse is occasionally met with in very unlikely places. The following effusion is painted on the sign of Edwin Jas. Rowe, postman and shoemaker:—

“Here lives a man who don't refuse
To mend all kinds of boots and shoes;
His work is good, his charge is just,
He is so poor he cannot trust.”

CHARITIES.—Thomas Hollingworth, in 1675, gave a close of land adjoining Bramcote to the poor of Sawley, Long Eaton, and Bramcote. This land was exchanged in 1842. The rent, £15 yearly, is divided equally between Sawley, Long Eaton, and Bramcote. The Poor's Close, rent £12 a year, is distributed 'at Christmas amongst the industrious poor. Almshouses for six poor persons were built by public subscription in 1858.

MAPPERLEY.

Mapperley is a small parish and township, containing 981 acres, in the hundred of Appletree, electoral division of Sandiacre, petty sessional division of Smalley, union and county court district of Belper, and Deanery of Ilkeston. It is under the jurisdiction of a parish council of six members, and it elects one guardian and rural district councillor. The total extent of land under assessment is 940 acres, ratable value £3,234, and the population, in 1891, was 531. A. M. Mundy, Esq., is lord of the manor; and that gentleman, F. A. Newdigate, Esq., and W. D. N. Drury-Lowe, Esq., are the principal landowners.

In the reign of Edward the Confessor, the manor of Maperlie belonged to one Staplevine, but William the Norman ousted the English owner and took possession of his lands. At the time of the Domesday Survey (circa 1086), William Peverel held the manor for the King, and in 1235 it was in like manner held by Richard Sandiacre by the service of providing a dog kennel. In 1266 a weekly market on Mondays, and a fair at the festival of the Holy Trinity, were granted to Simon de Arden, in which he was succeeded by Thomas de Luche. Subsequently the manor passed by marriage to the Willoughbys; and it afterwards belonged to the Gilberts of Locko. The Strelleys had a mansion and an estate here; and as early as the middle of the 13th century, episcopal sanction was given to Hugh de Strelley and Matilda, his wife, to establish a chapel within the grounds of their mansion at Mapperley. The permission to attend mass here was confined exclusively to the family and household of Hugh and Matilda, and neither could any marriage service be performed therein. A few traces of this old chapel may be seen built into the wall of a house near the church.

The village, which is small and chiefly inhabited by colliers, is situated two miles N.W. from Ilkeston, and $7\frac{1}{2}$ N.E. from Derby. A chapel-of-ease, dedicated to the Holy Trinity, was erected here in 1851, at a cost of £750. It is a plain building in the Early English style, consisting of chancel, nave, porch, and turret containing five bells. In 1870, Mapperley was separated from Kirk Hallam and formed into an ecclesiastical parish. There are 200 sittings and all are free. The living is a vicarage worth £130, with residence, in the gift of F. A. Newdigate, Esq., and held by the Rev. John Mello, M.A. In connection with the church is a good day school, attended by about 130 children. The Wesleyan Methodists have a chapel in the village, built, in 1874, to accommodate 150.

Park Hall is a small hamlet a little N.W. of the village. Here was the mansion of the Strelleys, but not a vestige of the building now remains.

Mapperley is one of the parishes entitled to benefit in the Free School of West Hallam, founded by the Rev. John Scargill.

MORLEY.

This is a parish and township containing 1,853 acres, of which 1,757 are under assessment; ratable value £3,289, and population 298. It is in the hundred of Morleston and Litchurch, petty sessional and county council electoral division of Smalley, county court district and union of Belper, and deanery of Ilkeston. The soil is various—clay, marl, gravel, and sand—and upwards of two-thirds of it are laid down in pasture; the other crops are turnips, wheat, and oats. Gritstone is quarried on Morley Moor, where about twelve hands are constantly employed. The stone is chiefly used for grindstones and scythe-stones. Two collieries were in operation about a century ago, and it is said that the coal is not yet exhausted. The land belongs to several owners; the following are the most extensive:—R. S. W. Sitwell, Esq., J.P., Stainsby House, Smalley; H. A. S. Bateman, Esq., Etwall; F. O. F. Bateman, Esq., Breadsall Mount; the Rector of Morley, in right of his church; Charles Schwind, Esq., J.P., Broomfield Hall; and the Derby and Derbyshire Banking Company.

Certain lands in Morley were given to Burton Abbey by Wulfric Spott, its founder, in 1002. At the time of the Domesday Survey the manor belonged to Henry de Ferrers. In 1235 Morley and Smalley are mentioned amongst the manors held of Hugh, Earl of Chester, by the abbot of Chester. The abbots had free warren in the parish, by the grant of Edward I.; and about the same time a family named De Morley possessed lands here and held the manor under the abbots. Goditha, the heiress of this family, brought Morley and other property to her husband, Ralph de Stathum, who died in 1380. After four generations the line terminated in an heiress, wife of John Sacheverell, who was slain at the battle of Bosworth Field, in 1485. The last male heir of this family died in 1724. The manor passed in moieties to the Batemans and the Sitwells. The early owners had a residence here, but the only fragment left is a small portion of wall containing a 15th century doorway, that gave entrance to the courtyard. The mansion was of considerable magnitude, and stood close to the church, with which it was connected by a private passage, though the Sacheverells remained firm in their attachment to the old religion.

The village stands about four miles N.E. of Derby, and two miles from Breadsall, the nearest railway station. The church, dedicated to St. Matthew, is an ancient edifice of stone, in the Gothic style, consisting of chancel, nave, north and south aisles, south porch, and tower, surmounted by an octagonal spire. The funeral brass of Ralph Stathum, in the north aisle, who died in 1380, states that he built "this chapel"—probably the north aisle, with its chapel at the east end; and it further says that Goditha, his widow, rebuilt the tower and the rest of the church. The north aisle was rebuilt and widened in the 16th century to accommodate five windows brought from Dale Abbey, after its destruction in 1539. These windows, each consisting of four lights, were filled with their original painted glass, and protected by wooden shutters; but after the removal of the latter, at the close of last century, they were wantonly mutilated by visitors and others, who abstracted pieces of the glass as curiosities, until only three remained. These, too, were very much damaged; but were carefully restored in 1847, at the expense of T. O. Bateman, Esq., of Chaddesden. Various mediæval legends are delineated; but the most interesting is that of St. Robert the Hermit, who, according to the story, obtained a grant from the king of as much land as betwixt two suns could be encircled by a plough drawn by deer which were to be caught in the forest. The whole story is depicted in seven compartments, accompanied by explanatory inscriptions. In No. I. some monks are represented shooting deer that are eating the corn; in No. II. the foresters make complaint to the King; No. III., St. Robert impounds the deer that come to eat his corn; No. IV., St. Robert is summoned before the King; No. V., the keepers again complain to the King; No. VI., St. Robert receives permission to enclose and hold as much land for the church as he can plough in a day with a yoke of deer; No. VII., shows the saint ploughing with the deer. The eighth and remaining compartment, which has no connection with the legend of St. Robert, represents a monk reproving an erring brother whose hands are manacled, the inscription below being "Take heed to thy ways, brother." The next window delineates the legend of the Holy Cross, in ten compartments. The east window of this aisle contains, in its three lights, full length figures of the Blessed Virgin, St. Ursula, and St. Mary Magdalen. There is also some old painted glass in the windows of the south aisle. In one are figures of St. Roger, with mitre and pastoral staff; St. John, prior of Bridlington, of whom no formal bull of canonisation was ever issued; and St. William, Archbishop of York. The west window is a modern one, executed by Burlisson and Grylls, in memory of the Hon. Mrs. W. Jervis, daughter of Robert S. Sitwell, Esq., of Morley Hall. The chancel window has three lights, one of which is blocked up by the monument of Jonathan Sacheverell; in the other two are represented St. Peter and St. Elizabeth.

The church is particularly rich in ancient brasses. One to Ralph de Stathum and Goditha, his wife, has been alluded to above; another to Goditha and Richard, her son, who was associated with his mother in the rebuilding of the church. John de Stathum, another benefactor, who died in 1454, is commemorated in three brasses. On one of these, attached to a slab of Purbeck marble, John de Stathum is represented in plate armour, bare-headed, kneeling on his helmet with hands conjoined in prayer. Opposite to him kneels Cecily, his wife, clad in a loose gown and a mitred head-dress. She died in 1444. Below the figures is an inscription, which states in the quaint English of the period that he "gat to yis churche iij belles & ordyned iijs. iiijd. yerely for brede to be done in almes amonge pore folk of ys prsch." At the east end of the south aisle is an altar tomb bearing an elaborate brass to the memory of Sir Thomas Stathum, who died in 1470, and his two wives. The knight is represented in plate armour, with his head resting on a helmet; and the two wives are clad in long flowing gowns and mitred head-dresses. Near this, under a canopied archway between the chancel and the south chapel, is an altar tomb of Purbeck marble, inlaid with brasses, commemorating Henry Stathum, who died in 1480, and his three wives. He is cased in elegant plate armour, his head resting on a helmet and his feet on a lion. Two of the wives are dressed somewhat alike; the third, who survived him, wears over her gown a mantle, fastened across the shoulders with a cord, and over her head-dress hangs a veil. Above the figures is this supplicatory distich:— "Thou art my brothur or my sester; Pray for us a Pater Noster."

There are also brasses to John Sacheverell, who was slain at the battle of Bosworth Field, and Joan, his wife; and to Henry Sacheverell, who died in 1585, and Isabella, his wife. In the former, Sir John and his wife are represented kneeling on cushions opposite to each other; he is cased in plate armour, with three boys behind him, and she in a tight-fitting gown and pedimental head-dress, followed by five daughters. There are several mural monuments bearing effigies, and tablets to later members of the Sacheverell family. The church was thoroughly restored and reseated with open benches of carved oak in 1850, at a cost of £426; new choir seats were added in 1884, and an organ in 1885. Two of the ancient bells remain in the tower; the third was recast in 1614. The clock was erected in 1887, in commemoration of the Queen's Jubilee. The registers date from 1540. The living is a rectory in the gift of R. S. Sitwell, Esq., net value £550, with residence, and held by the Rev. Charles John Boden, B.A., Trinity College, Cambridge.

In the churchyard is the shaft of a sepulchral cross, which, in 1762, was made the pedestal for a sun dial; and the shaft of another cross, with steps complete, stands within the rectory grounds near the church. Hard by is a spring which never freezes over; and there is another copious spring of excellent water issuing from a rock on the Park farm.

A Board school was erected in the village in 1880, at a cost of £1,400, including teacher's residence. There is accommodation for 60 children, and an average attendance of 44.

Broomfield Hall is the property and residence of Charles Schwind, Esq., J.P., by whom it was erected in 1870. The estate, containing 107 acres, was sold by the Exors. of Sir Hugh Bateman, in 1855, to Mr. Henry Boden, who disposed of it to the late Robert Smith, Esq., from whose Exors. it was purchased by the present owner in 1870. The grounds are tastefully laid out, and the mansion is lighted throughout with electricity. There are also gas works, and an ample water supply, on the estate.

OCKBROOK.

This parish, originally a chapelry to Elvaston, comprises 1,619 acres of land, with a ratable value of £10,326, and a population of 2,166; in the hundred of Morleston and Litchurch; petty sessional division and county court district of Derby; union and rural district of Shardlow; and deanery of Ilkeston. E. H. Pares, Esq., W. D. N. Drury-Lowe, Esq., Wm. Mallalieu, Esq., H. T. Alton, Esq., Rev. M. A. Smelt, Rev. L. Lewis, and Lord Harrington are the principal landowners.

The manor of Ochebroc which belonged to Tochi, in the reign of Edward the Confessor, was held at the time of the Domesday Survey by Geoffrey Alselin, whose descendant, Ralph Hanselin, gave the chapel of Ockbrook and its tithes to the priory which he had founded at Shelford. About the middle of the 12th century, Ralph Fitz-Geremund held half the vill of Ockbrook; and this moiety subsequently passed in marriage to Serlo de Grendon. Sir Godfrey Foljambe, who died in the 50th year of Edward III., and lies buried in Bakewell Church, was seized of the manor of Ockbrook, which he left to his wife Avena; and a little later, the manor passed by the marriage of the Foljambe heiress to the Plomptons. Subsequently it belonged to the Seymours, from whom it was purchased early in the 16th century by the Windsors; and in 1583 Frederick Lord Windsor sold the manor to twelve freeholders.

Ockbrook, a large and well-built village with many good villa residences, is situated $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles E. from Derby, and one mile from Borrowash station on the Midland railway.

The church dedicated to All Saints is an ancient edifice consisting of chancel, a wide nave, and a west tower with low octagonal spire, containing three bells. The chancel was rebuilt in 1803, as shown by that date above the east window; and the nave was enlarged in 1835 and thoroughly repaired at a cost of £700. A beautiful carved oak screen separates the chancel from the nave; this and the old 16th century stained glass in the east window representing the four Evangelists, were brought from Wigston's Hospital, at Leicester, by Mr. Pares, in 1810. On the north side of the chancel is the entrance to the Pares' vault; and immediately above it is their pew. The family are commemorated in stained glass and marble. One monument represents a weary traveller laid down to rest with his bundle beside him. It is inscribed to the memory of Thomas Pares, Esq., F.S.A., who died in 1824. Another, representing Death with his sickle gathering in his harvest, commemorates another Thomas Pares, father of the above, who died in 1805. On the north wall of the nave is a monument to the Rev. Henry Swindell with a well-executed medallion portrait, and the following epitaph:—

"So lowly He, neat Benefice declin'd,
A gen'ral Friend, no Slave to human kind,
Whilst his pure Soul on Anchor Hope reclin'd."

A spacious gallery occupies the west end of the nave, containing a small organ. The tower and spire were repaired in 1890, at an expense of £180. There was formerly a south porch, but the principal entrance is now in the tower. Here stands an ancient font on which Time has left its traces. It is circular in form, and of evident Norman workmanship, proving that there was a chapel here as early as the 12th century. The following extract from the Dodsworth MSS., in the Bodleian Library, quoted in Glover's "History of Derbyshire," vol. I., p. 309, illustrates the custom of church ales, by which money was raised for the repair of churches. It was somewhat analogous to the tea-feasts of the present day, but "the cup that cheers and doth not inebriate" was then unknown:—

"The inhabitants of Elvaston and Ockbrook were formerly required by mutual agreement to brew four ales, and every ale of one quarter of malt, and at their own costs and charges, betwixt this and the feast of St. John the Baptist next coming. And every inhabitant of Ockbrook shall be at the several ales; and every husband and wife were to pay twopence, every cottager one penny, and all the inhabitants of the said towns of Elvaston, Thurlaston, and Ambaston, shall have and receive all the profits and advantages, coming of the said ales, to the use and behoof of the said church of Elvaston; and the inhabitants of the said towns of Elvaston, Thurlaston, and Ambaston, shall brew eight ales betwixt this and the feast of St. John the Baptist, at which ales, and every one of them, the inhabitants shall come and pay as before rehearsed, who, if he be away at one ale to pay at the t'oder ale for both, or else to send his money. And the inhabitants of Ockbrook shall carry all manner of tymbre, being in the Dale wood now felled, that the said priest chyrch of the said towns of Elvaston, Thurlaston, and Ambaston shall occupy to the use of the said church."

Ockbrook remained a chapelry to Elvaston till after the dissolution of monasteries when the tithes passed into lay hands. The living is now a vicarage, worth £250 per annum, with residence, in the gift of E. H. Pares, Esq., and held by the Rev. Lewis Lewis, B.A., since 1877.

The Primitive Methodists have had a small chapel in the village since 1824; there is also a National School, capable of accommodating 240 children.

The Moravian Brethren have a settlement at Ockbrook, founded in 1750. The buildings are ranged in a line, with chapel in the centre. The Brethren have two Boarding Schools here for youths and young ladies under separate management. The latter was established in 1799, and the boys' school was commenced in 1820. The object of each institution is "to afford sound and ample instruction in the various branches of learning requisite to a useful and liberal education, and to train the pupils in such a manner as to embue them with the principles of Evangelical Christianity, and to prepare them for the faithful and efficient discharge of their duties in after life."

Borrowash is a large and important village, on the north bank of the river Derwent, which here divides the parish of Ockbrook from Elvaston. Here, on the bank of the Derwent, is the cotton doubling factory of Messrs. Towle & Co., which gives employment to a considerable number of hands. This factory occupies the site of the ancient corn mill, the tithe of which was given by Ralph FitzGeremund, lord of half the town of Ockbrook, to the baker hermit of Dale, from whom it passed to the Abbots of Dale after the establishment of the monastery. A chapel-of-ease, dedicated to St. Stephen, was erected here in 1890. It is a neat cruciform structure of brick, consisting of chancel, nave, and transepts. The cost of erection was about £1,100, and there is sitting accommodation for 170. All seats are free. In connection with the church are commodious day schools, attended by 200 children. The Wesleyan and Primitive Methodists have chapels, built in 1825 and 1851 respectively. The west end of the village stretches into Spondon parish.

CHARITIES—Robert Piggin, in 1706, left 40s. yearly, payable out of a farm at Chaddesden, to be distributed amongst the poor of the parish on Good Friday. Anne Potter, in 1709, left a rent-charge of 20s. per annum. Mr. W. Mallalieu is the present owner of the property, and the money is distributed on Whit-Monday. Edward James, in 1709, gave 20s. yearly to the poor. This sum is payable out of Bartlewood Lodge, the property of W. D. N. Drury-Lowe, Esq., and is distributed by the churchwardens. William James, in 1732, devised a plot of land called Moor Close, which has been exchanged for another parcel called Poor's Close, the rent of which is distributed amongst the poor. The poor also receive from Gisborne's bequest £6 10s, which is expended in the purchase of warm clothing.

PENTRICH.

Pentrich is a civil and ecclesiastical parish, the former containing 1,256 acres and the latter 2,500 acres. The Duke of Devonshire is lord of the manor and principal landowner. The Midland Railway Co. are also considerable proprietors. The ratable value is £2,669, and the population in 1891 was 303, a decrease of 584 since 1881. Coal mining is pursued to some extent by William Coates Haslam, Esq., by whose family the Pentrich collieries have been worked for nearly one hundred years. There are two pits—the Speedwell and the Hartington. The latter was sunk in 1880 to the Low Main or Furnace coal, 165 yards deep, and is fitted with all the most modern appliances, including electric lighting and pumping. The Speedwell shaft was sunk in 1842, and has, probably, one of the oldest pumping and winding engines in England. It was constructed in 1791 by Frank Thompson, of Chesterfield, and still performs its work in a satisfactory manner. About 300 men and boys are employed at the two pits. Cotton doubling and the lace thread manufacture are carried on by Messrs. J. Towlson & Co., at the Egerton Mills. The Cromford canal divides this parish from Ripley.

Pentrich is in the hundred of Morleston and Litchurch, petty sessional and electoral division of Smalley, poor law union of Belper, county court district and deanery of Alfreton. Under the Local Government Act of 1894 it has a parish council of five members, and it elects one rural district councillor and guardian.

At the time of the Domesday Survey the manor of Pentrich was held by Levenot under Ralph Fitz-Hubert; and Hubert Fitz-Ralph (his grandson) and Ralph Fitz-Stephen gave it to the monks of Darley Abbey. Early charters mention the forest or wood of Pentrich and its iron mines. After the dissolution of the abbey, the estate was granted by the Crown to Sir George Zouch of Codnor. In 1634, Sir John Zouch and his son and heir sold the estate to an ancestor of the Duke of Devonshire.

The village is situated $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles S. by W. from Alfreton, two miles from Ripley, and half-a-mile from Butterley station, on the Ambergate and Pye Bridge branch of the Midland railway. There is one regrettable incident in the history of Pentrich. Our long continued wars in the early years of the present century caused an utter stagnation of trade; wages were low, food was dear, and the labouring classes were reduced to a state of semi-starvation, which they bore bravely, if not cheerfully. The general peace which followed the defeat of Napoleon did not, at least for some considerable time, improve the condition of the working classes. The National Debt had been increased by 600 millions; taxation was strained to its utmost bearable tension, and in consequence of unfavourable harvests wheat rose to 90s. a quarter. Discontent openly manifested itself in various large manufacturing towns, and political reformers declaimed against the lavish expenditure of the Government in pensions and sinecures to the rich. Such was the state of affairs in 1817, when a few stockingers and handloom weavers hatched a plot to overthrow the Government. As they travelled from village to village their number increased, but it never exceeded 300, and with this mere handful they decided to attack Nottingham. At Eastwood they were confronted by a troop of Hussars sent out to intercept them. At the sight of the soldiers their courage failed them, and throwing down their improvised arms they fled helter-skelter as fast as their legs would carry them. Upwards of thirty were captured, and committed to take their trial at Derby for high treason. The three ringleaders—Brandreth, Ludlam, and Turner—were declared guilty, and sentenced to be hanged, drawn, and quartered; about a dozen were transported, and others imprisoned for various periods. How such a fiasco of an attempt to overthrow the existing Government could be magnified into high treason passeth understanding; and stranger still is it that any jury except a packed one, could be found to bring in a verdict of guilty. Several of the rioters belonged to Pentrich.

The church, dedicated to St. Matthew, is an ancient edifice of stone, consisting of chancel, nave, north and south aisles, south porch, and a western tower. The latter is surmounted by an embattled parapet, as also are the nave, south aisle, and south porch, which gives the edifice a beautiful and imposing aspect. There is no record of its foundation; but it was in existence in 1175, when it was given by Ralph Fitz-Stephen to the monks of Darley, together with all its appurtenances and liberties, including pannage in the forest for forty pigs. That church was Norman, and the five semicircular arches on each side of the nave doubtlessly belonged to it. The font also is of the same date, though it rests on a modern shaft, inscribed 1662. This interesting relic was discovered about forty-five years ago in the cellar of a house at Ripley, the residence of a former churchwarden, where it was used as a vessel for holding the brine in which beef was salted. The Perpendicular Gothic style characterises the rest of the church, from which it is inferred that the fabric was largely restored and enlarged about the middle of the 15th century. The fabric was restored in 1868, at a cost of £1,400, chiefly contributed by the late Duke of Devonshire. The nave, aisles, and chancel were re-roofed, the whitewash scraped off the interior walls, and the church re-pewed. The chancel underwent restoration and improvement in 1875, when the floor was laid with encaustic tiles of an old ecclesiastical design, a marble step was put down, and the floor of the sacarium laid with tiles of a richer pattern. The ancient piscina was restored in Caen stone, and the choir stalls re-arranged. The east window, of five lights, and very obtusely pointed, was filled with stained glass, in 1883, in memory of the Rev. G. H. J. Pocock, formerly vicar of Pentrich. The beautiful stone reredos, which covers the whole of the east wall below this window, was the gift of the late William Jessop, Esq., of Butterley Hall, in 1876. It was designed by the late Sir Gilbert Scott, and cost £65. On the north wall is a marble monument, bearing the following inscription.—“This monument perpetuates the memory of Madam Mawer, whose remains are deposited in the middle aisle of this church, near to this place. She died on the 25th day of February, 1776, in the 23rd year of her age. She was the youngest daughter of Mr. Joseph White, and the dearly beloved wife of the Rev. Kaye Mawer, A.M., chaplain to the 2nd Battalion of the 1st (or Royal) Regiment of Foot, and youngest son of the Rev. John Mawer, D.D., who was descended from the ancient and illustrious house of Mawer, and was as great a linguist as this nation ever produced. She was a very religious, beautiful, virtuous, dutiful, loving, and affectionate wife; and it pleased God to take her at so early a period from this vain, troublesome, and transitory world, to enjoy, it's to be hoped, the more solid, substantial, immutable, and never-failing glories of the next. Her husband, penetrated with the deepest sorrow for the loss of so excellent a lady, erected this monument as a tribute due to her incomparable merit, and to transmit to posterity his great love and regard for the best of wives.” Another monument commemorates Lieutenant Edward Wood, who was killed in the action at Meeanee, near Hyderabad, in 1843, whilst bravely cheering on his men to victory in that unequal conflict. There is also one to Captain Horne, who died in 1764. The Bradley family are commemorated on a large monument of wood. The chancel arch is pointed. Above it is an oil painting of Abraham about to sacrifice his son Isaac; and at either side of the arch is the figure of an angel, painted by the vicar, in 1893. At the west end of the church is another wall painting by the vicar, representing Our Saviour calling St. Matthew from the receipt of customs. There are monuments in the aisles to the Woolleys and the Jessops. The tower contains five bells, two having been added in 1869. The oldest one, evidently pre-Reformation, bears the invocation “ Ave Maria Gratia plena" (hail Mary full of grace.) The living is a vicarage, worth £150 yearly, with residence, in the gift of the Duke of Devonshire, and held by the Rev. W. J. Ledward.

The oldest Nonconformist chapel was built about 1662, and is endowed with £8 per annum from land in Ripley, for which the Rev. Mr. Race, of Riddings, preaches eight times a year. It retains some of its old stone mullioned windows, and two lancet ones of modern insertion. About twenty years ago a porch was added, and the old roof of thatch was replaced by one of tiles. The chapel is now used by the United Free Church Methodists.

A school was erected by the Duke of Devonshire in 1819. In 1892 it was transferred to the Ripley School Board, by whom it has been enlarged. The wakes, or feast, is held on the last Sunday in September.

RIPLEY.

Ripley is an important parish and thriving town in the hundred of Morleston and Litchurch, petty sessional division of Smalley, county court district and deanery of Alfreton, and union of Belper. Its total area according to the Ordnance Survey is 2,815 acres; ratable value, £27,587; and the population in 1891 was 8,774. The Butterley Iron and Coal Company are the principal land-owners. Until recent years this extensive and busy district was included in the parish of Pentrich.

At the time of the Domesday Survey Ripley belonged to Ralph Fitz-Hubert, and about a century later Ralph Fitz-Stephen gave the manors of Ripley, Pentrich, and Oakerthorpe to the Abbey of Darley; and about the same time he gave certain lands at Waingrove to the Knights Hospitallers. After the dissolution of Darley Abbey, the lands at Pentrich and Ripley, which had belonged to that convent, were presented by the Crown to the Zouches of Codnor. In 1634, Sir John Zouch sold all his Derbyshire estates, and Ripley subsequently passed through various hands till eventually purchased by the Butterley Company.

The district owes its prosperity to the abundance of coal and iron ore, and still more to the energy of commercial enterprise of the Butterley Iron and Coal Company. Iron mines were worked here as early as the middle of the 13th century, but it was not until 1790 that furnaces were erected for smelting the ore. The undertaking was initiated and carried out by Messrs. Outram and Jessop, with whom were associated Messrs. Wright and Beresford. The two first named gentlemen had for some years been connected with James Brindley, the celebrated engineer, in constructing the Cromford canal. Mr. Outram was the first to project the tramways now so familiar to every one, and which were originally called Outram roads. The company at first went under the name and style of Benjamin Outram and Co., and so remained until 1823, when the title was changed to the Butterley Company. The present proprietary consists entirely of members of the Wright family, all other interests having been eliminated.

Commencing with three blast furnaces, the company soon achieved a reputation for the quality of the iron produced and for superiority of workmanship; and now after the lapse of a century it still maintains its fame, and in recent years has carried out some of the largest contracts ever undertaken, a few of which only we may mention:—The famous roof of St. Pancras Railway Station, London, erected in 1865-9. The span of this roof, which was manufactured and erected by the Butterley Company, is the largest in the world; other examples of their work may be seen in the iron bridge over the Thames at Vauxhall, the large bridge over the old Maas at Dordrecht, the bridge at Leith Harbour, and in numerous roofs and bridges in the West Indian and other docks on the Thames. To maintain a long and well-earned reputation in these days of scientific discovery and excessive competition it is necessary to keep abreast with the progress of the age. This, under the spirited and enlightened management of the company, has been done, and the works throughout are fitted with the latest and most efficient mechanical appliances. The three old furnaces have been superseded by two of very large size and improved construction, and a complete plant for the production of steel by the latest and most approved methods has been laid down. The company do a large business in cast-iron pipes, which vary from 1½ inches to six feet and upward in diameter. The pipes used in the pumping engines of the Mersey Tunnel Railway were cast here, and weighed three tons each.

The Bridge and Boiler shops are interesting departments, from the application of machinery to supersede hand labour. The old-fashioned method of hand-rivetted has been almost abolished, that work being here performed by steam and pneumatic rivetting machines; and in another place may be seen several drilling and slotting machines, doing their work with unerring precision. Not less interesting are the Engine shops, where engines may be seen in the different stages of manufacture.

The Butterley Works form only a portion of the gigantic concern; there are works on a still larger scale at Codnor Park, and at Silverdale in North Staffordshire.

The Company are also extensive colliery owners, and hold some 30,000 acres of land under lease and freehold. The output from the Butterley mines is about 1,000,000 tons per annum. They have also extensive lime quarries and works near Ambergate. In these and their various other works, the Company give employment to about 10,000 hands in fairly prosperous times.

Messrs. Crossley & Son, manufacturers of silk, mohair, and cotton braids, laces, cords, and plaited wicks; and Messrs. Ogle & Son, agricultural implement makers, also give employment to a considerable number of the inhabitants.

The town of Ripley is situated on the Derby and Alfreton road, 10 miles north from Derby, and is easily accessible by the Midland railway, on which there is a station close to the town. The streets are compactly arranged, clean, well macadamised, and in the main thoroughfares lined with excellent shops and business premises. There is a spacious Market Place, in which a well-attended market is held. The market was granted as far back as the reign of Henry III., and was formerly held on Wednesday, but for the convenience of the mining and manufacturing population it has been transferred to Saturday. A commodious Market House or Town Hall was erected in 1880. It is an ornamental building of brick with stone dressings, and contains the public offices, and a court-room in which petty sessions are held. The Local Board, formed in 1867, is now superseded by an Urban Council, whose district is co-extensive with the parish. A system of drainage has been carried out, and the out-fall is utilized on two sewage farms. Gasworks were erected in 1864, and Waterworks constructed in 1876.

The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a neat edifice of cut stone in the Gothic style, built in 1821, at a cost of £1,600, and enlarged in 1861. It comprises chancel with vestry on the north side, nave, and an embattled tower, the lower stage of which forms the entrance porch. The chancel is separated from the nave by a lofty pointed arch terminating in floriated corbels. The floor is laid with encaustic tiles, and the roof is painted to represent the star-bespangled sky. The side walls are surrounded by a dado of chocolate colour, and above, the white expanse is relieved by some simple but chaste ornamentation. The three-light east window was filled with stained glass in 1868. The nave is seated with open pews of pitchpine, and crossing the west end is a gallery. Several of the windows are stained-glass memorials, and a few monumental slabs adorn the walls. There are five bells in the tower, cast by Taylor, of Loughborough, in 1866, and above these is a clock, designed, manufactured, and presented by Sir John Gay Newton Alleyne, Bart., J.P., in 1867. There is sitting accommodation for 600, and all the seats are free. The living is a vicarage, worth £300 per annum, with residence, in the gift of trustees, and held, since 1887, by the Rev. W. E. Bradstock, M.A., who is also Rural Dean of Alfreton.

To meet the increasing demand for church accommodation a temporary iron church, dedicated to St. John, was opened in 1871, and on June 28th, 1893, the foundation-stone of a permanent edifice was laid by F. Beresford Wright, Esq., chairman of the Butterley Co. It is a very plain but substantial edifice of brick with stone facings, consisting of nave and aisles which, however, only form part of the entire plan. The site was given by the Butterley Co., and the cost of erection was about £2,500, raised by subscription—the Butterley Co. contributing £300 for every £700 otherwise collected. The church will seat 400 adults and all seats are free. The Rev. C. R. Round is the curate-in-charge. There are also Mission Rooms at Butterley and Nuttall's Park. The latter Mission was established by the Rev. Henry F. Wright, who was for two years curate of All Saints, and died on his way to India. The room has been erected to the memory of the deceased gentleman at a cost of £200.

Nonconformity is a potent element in the religious life of Ripley, and several commodious chapels have been erected. The Congregational Chapel, situated at Butterley Hill, is a plain building, erected in 1869, to accommodate about 200. The Baptist Chapel, in Church Street, is a rather pretentious edifice of brick with stone dressings, built in 1846, at a cost of £900. The interior is imposing in appearance and handsomely furnished with open pews of pitchpine. Three domes admit light from the roof, and there are also as many semicircular headed windows in each side wall. On the wall above the gallery is a very handsome monument to Thomas and Ann Ward, who died in 1858. The former was chosen deacon when this congregation was formed in 1833. The chapel will seat comfortably 450 persons. Adjoining the chapel are Sunday Schools, capable of accommodating upwards of 600 children. The total cost, including purchase of the site, was about £3,000. The Christadelphians have a small chapel in Park Road, built in 1888, to accommodate 60 persons. The Primitive Methodist Chapel, in Wood Street, originally belonged to the Wesleyan Reformers. It is a plain building of brick, with gallery, seated with open pews to accommodate 400. The organ was presented by Mr. George Haynes, in 1892. Affixed against the wall on either side is a neat stone monument; the one to James Law, the other to Emanuel Buxton. Adjoining the chapel, at the rear, is a spacious Sunday School, built in 1892, at a cost of £1,379, including chapel improvements. Another and very handsome chapel was erected in 1893, at a total cost of £2,075, including Sunday School premises for 300 children. It is situated in the neighbourhood near the station, and will accommodate 450 people. The head of a circuit, which also includes Golden Valley, Swanwick, Codnor, Nether Heage, Westwood, Marehay, and New Bridge, is the circuit minister. The circuit meeting place is the Methodist Free Church (Ebenezer Chapel), in Nottingham. The edifice with an imposing front, ascended by a bold flight of steps, is seated with open pews, arranged in a horseshoe fashion. It has a very good organ, by J. R. Cousins, of Lincoln, built in 1880. Under the chapel are a Sunday School and three classrooms. The chapel was erected in 1860 to accommodate 500, and is now enlarged. Adjoining is the Manse. The same society has another chapel at Green Hillocks, built in 1864. The circuit, of which Ripley is the head, includes Alfreton, Normanton, Swanwick, Pinxton, Birchwood, Peterborough, Brooks, Selston, Annesley Woodhouse, Hucknall, Huthwaite, and Hill. The Rev. J. Holgate is the circuit minister.

The Wesleyan Methodists built their present chapel in 1860, at a cost of £2,000. It is a large brick building with a horseshoe gallery, and accommodates nearly 700 persons. On the wall is a tablet in the memory of William Penny, who died in 1887, after having been a local preacher, chapel extending over 50 years as a local preacher, chapel superintendent, and school superintendent. He bequeathed to the trustees of the chapel £1,500, and a like sum to the Local Preacher's Mutual Aid Society. The chapel are the Centenary Memorial Sunday Schools, and is the head of a circuit which also includes Riddings, Heanor, South Wingfield, Somercotes, Buckland Hollow, Blackwell, and Berrister.

A Burial Board of nine members was formed in 1857, and ground were planted and laid out for a cemetery. There are two chapels for Churchmen and Nonconformists, built of brick and faced with cement in imitation of stone work. The general appearance attractive. A lodge corresponding to the entrance gates.

The Ripley United District School Board was formed in 1856, at a cost of £2,000. National schools were built in 1856, at a cost of £2,000, and enlarged. There are three departments located in three streets, and a total accommodation for 905 children, and there is an average attendance of nearly 761. Adjoining the schools are residences for the masters and also schools at Green Hillocks, in connection with St. Peter's, by the Butterley Co., in 1865, and enlarged in 1871, and are two departments (mixed and infants), with a total accommodation of 100, and an average attendance of nearly as many.

A very attractive-looking Public Hall was erected in 1860. On the ground floor are a large hall, commercial room, slipper and swifter's apartments; and above is a very fine hall, with several rooms. The Jubilee Institute and Club, in Wellington Street, is the property of W. C. Haslam, Esq., J.P. It contains a large hall and recreation rooms.

BUTTERLEY is a hamlet and village on the north side of the Trent. Here are the extensive iron works of the Butterley Co. The Cromford canal is conducted underneath the works for 70 yards in length, and near is a reservoir covering 70 acres. The Nottingham canal.

Butterley Hall, the residence of Albert Leslie Wright, Esq., J.P., is a substantial and pleasantly situated in a well-wooded park of about 50 acres. It belonged to the Hornes, who resided at Butterley Hall.

From this family it was purchased in 1790 by Francis Beresford and Benjamin Outram, Esqs. The latter gentleman took up his residence at the Hall, and here was born the famous General Outram, who was raised to a baronetcy for military prowess in India. About half-a-mile distant is Butterley station, on the Erewash Valley branch of the Midland railway.

HAMMERSMITH is a hamlet on the Pentrich road, near Butterley, and near by is Padley Hall, an ancient many-gabled farmhouse, dating from about the year 1600. Oliver Cromwell is said to have spent some time here.

HARTSHAY, UPPER and LOWER, are hamlets in the civil parish of Ripley, but ecclesiastically under Pentrich. From the higher parts of upper Hartshay are obtained extensive and beautiful views of the surrounding country. Coal mining is the principal industry, and formerly there was a spelter or zinc works, the remains of which have been recently removed. The School Board have a school at Lower Hartshay, erected in 1883 for the accommodation of 96 children.

MAREHAY is a village on the Derby road, one mile from Ripley, chiefly inhabited by colliers. The Primitive and Wesleyan Methodists have chapels here, erected in 1864 and 1866 respectively.

Greenwich is a village adjoining Ripley; and Pease Hill is a hamlet on the Green Hillocks and Codnor road.

WAINGROVES, or WAINGRIFF, is a hamlet in this parish, anciently belonging to the Knight Hospitallers, to whom it was given by Ralph Fitz-Stephen, that they might found a house of the Order at this place. No preceptory was erected; the land was let to a tenant, and at the Reformation passed into lay hands. Waingroves Hall, the residence of Mr. Charles Haslam, bears the date 1671. The Butterley Co. has a pit here, in which about 230 men are employed. A United Methodist Free Church was erected in 1867, and rebuilt and enlarged in 1880, after having been destroyed by fire the previous year. It is in the Riddings circuit. There is also a school built by the School Board in 1884, and enlarged during the present year.

RISLEY.

Risley is a parish and township containing 1,131 acres of land lying between Sandiacre and Hopwell, in the hundred of Morleston and Litchurch, petty sessional division and county court district of Derby, union and rural district of Shardlow, and deanery of Ilkeston. The ratable value is £2,251, and the number of inhabitants 248, who are chiefly employed in agriculture. The principal land-owners are Terah Hooley, Esq., J.P., Risley Lodge; Ernest Terah Hooley, Esq., Risley Hall; R. P. Stevens, Esq., and E. H. Pares, Esq.

The manor of Riseleia (Risley) at the time of the Domesday Survey was held by the King's thanes and Fulk under Roger de Busli. Soon afterwards it was in the possession of the Morteyns, and in the reign of Edward I., William Morteyn held Risley under Roger Paveley. From the Morteyns it passed by the marriage of Isabel, the heiress, to Sir Richard Willoughby, one of the Justices of the Common Pleas in the reign of Edward III., and for some time Chief Justice of the King's Bench. His younger son, Hugh, inherited Risley, and settled here, where his descendants continued to reside for several generations. Henry Willoughby, who was created a baronet in 1611, died without male issue in 1649, and this manor fell to the share of Anne, one of his daughters, who married (1) Sir Thomas Aston, Bart., and secondly, the Hon. Anchitel Grey. It was purchased from Sir Willoughby Aston, Bart., by John Hancock, Esq. It next passed to the Halls, and thence to the present owner.

The village is small, and stands on the Derby and Nottingham road, eight miles from the former, and two miles from the railway stations at Draycott, Sandiacre, and Sawley. Risley was formerly included in the parishes of Wilne and Sandiacre; there appears, however, to have been a chapel here at an early period. The present church, dedicated to All Saints, was built by Michael Willoughby and Katharine, his wife, in 1593, chiefly as a domestic chapel to Risley Hall. It consists of chancel, nave, north aisle, north vestry, and a west tower containing three bells. The church was repaired and re-pewed by subscription at a cost of £545 in 1841, when the north aisle and vestry were added. The chancel is separated from the nave by a wooden screen, ornamented with curious carved figures. The two-light east window represents SS. Peter and Paul, and there are also two other windows filled with stained glass in memory of the Hall family. The founder of the church is commemorated on a brass plate on the south side of the chancel. There are also tablets to the memory of members of the Hall, Hodgkinson, and Cocker families. The font, a handsome piece of work in Derbyshire alabaster, bears the Willoughby Arms four times repeated, and the communion plate also bears the Willoughby arms, and the date 1632, in which year the church was consecrated. The living, held in conjunction with Breaston, was formerly a perpetual curacy, but in 1867 it was constituted a rectory by the transference of a portion of the tithes from the Ecclesiastical Commissioners. The united value of the two benefices is £330; patron, the Bishop of Southwell.

A Free School was founded here in 1583 by Sir Michael Willoughby, who endowed it with 20 nobles (£6 13s. 4d.) per annum; and Sir Henry Willoughby, his grandson, increased the endowment to 20 marks (£13 6s. 8d.). The Hon. Elizabeth Grey, their descendant, very largely augmented the income, which now exceeds £400 per annum. There are an upper or classical school, an English school, and a girls' school, all entirely distinct. Provision is made for a liberal classical and modern education, free to boys whose parents are residing in the parishes of Risley, Breaston, Sandiacre, Dale Abbey, Stanton-by-Dale, Wils-thorpe, Draycott, Little Wilne, and Hopwell. Boarders are received by the Head Master.

CHARITY.—The Rev. Henry Banks Hall, in 1866, left a rent-charge of £2 yearly to the poor, and 20s. yearly to be applied in keeping the family vault in order.

SANDIACRE.

This is a parish and township comprising 1,096 acres: ratable value, £10,856; and population, 2,256. The soil is a strong clay except the site of the church, containing about one acre, which is sand, and from which the place derives its name. It is in the hundred of Morleston and Litchurch, petty sessional division of Smalley, county court district of Derby, union and rural district of Shardlow, and deanery of Ilkeston. The principal landowners are the Ecclesiastical Commissioners, R. P. Stevens, Midland Railway Co., Streets' Exors., and James Lakin. The surface is undulated, and not far from the village white rocks break out looking somewhat like clouds when viewed from a distance.

The manor was held at the time of the Domesday Survey by two of the King's thanes. Sometime later it belonged to a family named, from the place, de Sandiacre; and in Henry III.'s reign it was conveyed by the marriage of the Sandiacre heiress to William de Grey, a younger son of Sir Henry de Grey of Codnor. Subsequently it passed by marriage to the Leakes, but was sold after the death of Nicholas Leake, Earl of Scarsdale, in 1736. The abbot and convent of Dale were also possessed of considerable lands in the parish.

The large and flourishing village of Sandiacre is situated near the border of Nottinghamshire, $9\frac{1}{2}$ miles E. from Derby, and near the station of its own name on the Erewash Valley branch of the Midland railway. The lace manufacture is carried on to a considerable extent, and the engineering works of Baxters, Ltd., and Messrs. Wells Bros. afford employment to a large number of the inhabitants. The workshops and foundries of the latter firm cover about seven acres of ground, and are fitted with all the most modern and improved tools and appliances for the manufacture of gas and oil engines, for which the firm has a wide and well-deserved reputation.

There was a church here at the time of the Domesday Survey. Roger Longespee, Bishop of Lichfield and Coventry (1257-1295), instituted in his cathedral a prebendary of Sandiacre, to whom he appropriated the rectory—the prebendary being responsible for the due performance of Divine service either in person or through a chaplain. For two or three centuries previous to 1704, the prebendal rectory was farmed on lease, and the minister or curate was supported by the lessee. The living was augmented last century with £400 Queen Anne's Bounty, and subsequently with £1,000 Parliamentary grant, and thus became a perpetual curacy. The income was further increased by the Ecclesiastical Commissioners about 30 years ago out of the prebendal land (247 acres) and tithes; and shortly afterwards the benefice was gazetted a rectory. It is now in the gift of the Bishop of Southwell, and is worth £300 net per annum.

The following is a list of the Prebendaries and Rectors of Sandiacre from the creation of the prebend:—

1296 Walter de Langton (afterwards
Bishop of Lichfield)
1296 John Bensted
1331 John de Arundel
1331 Thomas de Garton

1342 Roger de Norbury (afterwards
Bishop of Lichfield)
1347 Simon de Islip (afterwards Bishop of Canterbury)
1350 Henry de Chaddesden

 1616 Joseph Hill
 1617 John Rowlandson
 1661 John Royston
 1678 Benjamin Woodroff
 1711 Richard Bynnes
 1713 Michael Hutchinson
 1721 Robert Pitt
 1730 Theophilus Rider
 1731 James Brookes 1763 Edmd. Law (afterwards Bishop of Carlisle)
 1769 Joseph Pote
 1797 William Walker
 1832 Jeremiah Smith
 1841 James Holme (incumbent) 1849 Joseph L. Longmire (first rector)
 1879 Daniel Smith (rector)

The church, dedicated to St. Giles, is a handsome edifice consisting of chancel, nave, and a west tower, with low spire, containing three bells. It was rebuilt in the Norman period, but extensive restorations subsequently took place in the Early English and Decorated styles. The chancel arch and inner door of the south porch are very fine examples of Norman work. The nave is supposed to have been built about the year 1160, on the site of the old Saxon church which was standing when the Domesday Survey was compiled in 1086. The spacious and handsome chancel was rebuilt in the Decorated period, probably by Roger de Norbury, about the year 1342. In 1855 the church was re-pewed and repaired at a cost of £500; and the sum of £2,000 has been spent since 1879 in a thorough and judicious restoration which has been carried out in a reverent and conservative spirit. The beautiful east window was filled with stained glass in 1887, in memory of Mr. Joseph Stevens, who died in 1885. It consists of six lights; on the two central ones are depicted the parables of the Good Shepherd and the Prodigal Son; in the two adjoining lights are shown the four Evangelists; the two outer lights are filled by the intertwining branches of roses and lilies; and in the tracery are represented the Agnus Dei, the Pelican feeding her young with her own blood, and other sacred symbols. This beautiful window was designed by the well-known firm of Cox, Sons, Buckley & Co., London. The posing of the various groups is artistic and graceful, the colouring rich and harmoniously blended, and the workmanship equal in every respect to the best productions of Germany or Belgium. There are also three very fine three-light windows with beautiful tracery in the north and in the south walls. In the south wall are three sedilia and a double piscina, which were restored in 1864. They are surmounted by high canopies of elaborate design and carving with intervening finials richly crocketed. On the floor is a stone coffin lid bearing an incised cross of beautiful design, with a nondescript animal on each side of the stem. Dr. Cox supposes it to have covered the grave of the builder of the church in the 12th century, and gives an excellent sketch of it, and also of the sedilia, in his "Churches of Derbyshire." There were formerly several memorials of the Charlton family in the chancel, but four only now remain. The Charltons settled at Sandiacre in the latter part of the 16th century, and for several generations they were the lessees or farmers of the prebend. Another slab on the chancel floor is thus quaintly inscribed:—

"Young men this memorial is here placed as well to put you in mind of your owne end as of the death of John Manley (who lies here interred), and of six more of his brothers and sisters, sons & daug. of Wilughby Manley, Gent., & Prudence, his wife, all of which departed this life before any of them attained the age of 12 years.

*Whence learne that young as soone as old may die,
Then let's all live for death preparedly,
Which that I may doe, pray thee, pray for mee,
And reader I will doe the like for thee. Wilughby Manley."*

There are also in the church memorials of the Foxcroft and Harrington families. The floor has been recently laid with Minton tiles at a cost of £203. The tower contains a peal of six fine-toned bells, given by the late Joseph Stevens, Esq., in 1881. The three old bells were of the 17th century date. The registers date from the year 1570.

The United Methodist Free Church is a handsome Gothic structure, built in 1887, at a cost of £2,000, to seat 450. The Wesleyans and Primitive Methodists also have chapels in the village.

Scholastic affairs are in the hands of a School Board of five members, by whom about £5,000 has been spent on the erection of schools. There are three departments, with an average attendance of 374.

SAWLEY.

Sawley is a parish and township in the hundred of Morleston and Litchurch, petty sessional and county court district of Derby, union and rural district of Shardlow, and deanery of Ilkeston. The township lies on the north bank of the river Trent, and according to the last Ordnance Survey comprises an area of 1,859½ acres; the ancient parish was much more extensive, and included the chapleries of Breaston, Long Eaton, Risley, and Wilne. It is valued for rating purposes at £8,106, and had in 1891 a population of 1,415. The soil is a rich loam, and is chiefly in grass. The Earl of Harrington (lord of the manor) and Wm. Parkinson Bennett, Esq., are the principal landowners.

Sawley, or Sallow, formed part of the endowment of the bishopric of Lichfield from a very early period; and when Bishop Ethelwald, who held that see from 817 to 825, appointed prebendaries in his cathedral church, one was styled the Prebend of Sawley, from the Church with its emoluments and lands assigned for his maintenance. By an ordinance of Bishop Roger de Weseham, in 1255, the churches of Sawley and Wilne, and all their appurtenances were conferred on the treasurer of the cathedral, and thenceforth the treasurer was always prebendary of Sawley. The manor remained an appendage to the see; and in 1258, Bishop Longespée obtained a grant of free warren, a weekly market on Tuesday, and a three days' fair at Michaelmas on his manor of Sawley. The bishop derived a considerable portion of his revenue from this manor, which was valued in the Valor of Pope Nicholas in 1291 at £42 Os. 8½d., equivalent in purchasing power to about £500 of present money; and Henry VIII. estimated its value at £70 19s. 9d. An ordinance of the Long Parliament for the sale of all episcopal estates and the Commonwealth, and in 1647 the fee-farm rent of Nathaniel Hallows for £400, equal to about four years' purchase. Harrington is the lessee of the manor, with all its appurtenances.

The village of Sawley, which is of considerable extent, lies on the bank of the Trent, a little below the junction of the D. 8½ miles east from Derby, 1½ miles from the station of its from that of Sawley Junction, both on the Derby and Nottingham Midland railway. The road from Nottingham to Ashley is on the river by a bridge, erected in 1786-90 at a cost of £20,000.

The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a large and ancient building, consisting of a spacious chancel, nave, north and south aisles (the north aisle disused), and an embattled western tower, surmounted by a spire. A church occupied the site in Saxon times, and the mass of masonry leading into the chancel is believed to be a portion of that of the old church. The visible remains indicating any restoration in the Norman period. In the 13th century the fabric was extensively rebuilt in the Early English style, and at that time the aisles were probably added. The chancel was restored by the Ecclesiastical Commissioners in 1865, and a thorough restoration was carried out in 1889, at a cost of £2,200, to which the Government contributed £700. The gallery, put up in 1838, was taken down and replaced in the chancel. The east window of five lights is of Decorated work. A three-light window, inserted in the north wall, has the following inscription:—"This window, representing the Holy Sepulchre, was placed by the clergy and lay representatives of the Deanery of Ockbrook as a token of affection for the late Mr. J. Rector of this parish, who for a period of 30 years (1851-1881) by his kindness, sound judgment, and impartiality presided over the management of the massive carved oak screen, between three and four hundred feet long, in the chancel from the nave; and previous to the unfortunate fire of 1838, the east end of each aisle was screened off by beautiful carved oak screens, or nine feet from the east wall, the chancel is crossed by a screen, reredos, with embattled parapet; and behind it, in the north wall, is an ancient door, now fastened up. The aisles are divided by pointed arches, springing from octagonal pillars, the nave by clustered columns. There was a chapel, with its own altar, on each aisle; that in the north aisle was the chantry chapel, founded by Ralph de Chaddesden, who was prebendary of Lichfield in 1266. The altar stone of the south chapel remains, as do the foundations of both chapels and in the chancel.

Several interesting old monuments remain. In a bay window projecting from the south side of the chancel, is an altar tomb with the effigy of an ecclesiastic, in cassock, surplice, and amice. On the tomb are four uncharged shields, in quatrefoils. There is a monument which formerly bore a Latin inscription intimating that under it lay the remains of the treasurer of Lichfield and prebendary of this church, Lightfoot. This recess are two windows—a four-light one on the west and a two-light one on the east—both filled with plain glass, but decorated with heraldry. Near the entrance to the chancel is an altar tomb, bearing the brass effigies of a man and his lady. The man wears a collar of roses, his head resting on his helmet. The lady wears a gown and mantle and widow's veil, her feet encased in brasses of their three sons and six daughters have gone, but the names, and above, still legible, are some of their names. Round the tomb is an inscription (now incomplete), intimating that it is the tomb of and heir of Roger Bothe, brother of John Bothe (Archdeacon of Durham) and of Ralph Bothe (Archdeacon of York), and Margaret, his wife. He died in 1478. Roger Bothe, father of the above Robert, was buried in the chancel, where his altar tomb remains under an ogee-shaped canopy. It bears small brass figures of an esquire and his lady, and two plates, on which are represented their seven sons and ten daughters. He died in 1467. The Bothes were a notable Lancashire family, many of whom attained to high positions in the church. Of the above Roger, Ormerod observes: "He was brother of two Archbishops of York, uncle to a Bishop of Exeter, father of Archdeacons of Durham and York, grandfather of a Bishop of Hereford, and great-grandfather of an Archdeacon of Hereford; a series of high dignitaries in the church, which were most probably never attained by the same number of descents of any other family." In the north aisle is the full length figure of an ecclesiastic, with hands joined; there is nothing whereby to identify it, but it is surmised to represent some former prebendary of Sawley. There are several modern memorials. A marble monument commemorates James Lowther Senhouse, M.A., who was for 21 years minister of Sawley, Wilne, and Long Eaton, and died in 1844; another perpetuates the memory of the Rev. William Harding, late perpetual curate of these parishes, who was drowned whilst bathing in the river Trent, July 1st, 1825. There are also tablets to various members of the Simpkin, Trowell, Hopkins, and other families.

The tower contains a peal of six bells, three of which were added in 1894, by subscription, in memory of the Rev. S. Hey. M.A., late rector; and the east window of the north aisle is a memorial of the same rev. gentleman.

As an evidence of the former importance of this church, it may be mentioned that ordinations frequently took place within its walls. Roger de Norbury held five ordinations at Sawley, the numbers ordained on one occasion, according to Dr. Cox, being 103 sub-deacons, 89 deacons, and 109 priests.

The early prebendaries frequently resided at Sawley, but ample provision was made for the maintenance of a vicar. From the 15th century down to 1866, the officiating priest was only a curate; in the latter year Sawley was gazetted a rectory. It is worth £296 per annum, with residence, and is in the gift of the dean and chapter of Lichfield. The Rev. Arthur Edward Clarke, B.A., is the present rector.

Nonconformity is represented in the village by three chapels. The Baptist Chapel, a large building of brick, capable of seating 300, was erected in 1800, and enlarged in 1845. The Wesleyan Chapel is a neat brick structure, built about ten years ago to supersede an older one. The Primitive Methodists have also a chapel here.

A National School was erected in 1771. This was superseded by the present premises in 1859. There are two departments, with accommodation for 200 children, and an average attendance of about that number. There is also a school in connection with the Baptist Chapel, which was enlarged in 1888, by the addition of an infants' room, at a cost of £400. T for 190, and an average attendance of 131. It has an annum, left by Mr. William Parkinson.

Wilsthorpe is a hamlet consisting of four farms and a north from Sawley. The Earl of Harrington is lord of the SHIPLEY.

Shipley is a civil parish lying on the eastern border of the county between Heanor and Ilkeston. It is in the hundred of Morleston and Litchurch, electoral division of Heanor, petty sessional division of Smalley, county court district of Belper, and union of Basford. For ecclesiastical purposes it is in the parish of Cotmanhay. It contains nearly 3,000 acres, tithe free, belonging solely to A. E. M. Mundy, Esq., who is also lord of the manor. There are 2,134 acres under assessment, valued at £9,580; population (1891), 689.

Shipley is rich in coal and iron. The former has been worked since 1775, but its presence, it is said, was known three centuries prior to that time, and as early as the year 1600 there were bloomaries or charcoal furnaces here for smelting the iron ore. The collieries are the property of Mr. Mundy. There are two pits in operation, both fitted with the most improved machinery. About 1,800 men and boys are employed, who turn out about 2,000 tons per day. One pit is 204 yards deep, the other 216 yards, and the following are the names of the several coal strata met with in descending:—

	FT. IN.		FT. IN.
Soft coal	1 6	Waterloo coal.....	3 8
Soft coal and smut	2 10	Soft coal	1 6
Soft coal	2 0	Soft coal	2 0
Light-coloured clay	0 6	Soft coal	1 4
Soft coal	1 10	Cannel	2 0
Light-coloured clod	0 4	Soft coal	1 4
Soft coal	1 2	Coal and shale	3 0
Top hard coal.....	6 2	Deep soft coal	4 3
Old Greaves coal	3 0	Black clod (clay)	4 9
Soft coal	1 6	Soft coal	0 9
Soft coal	0 9	Deep hard coal	5 6

The seams worked are the deep hard coal and the deep soft coal, the former possessing a high reputation as a steam coal. Both the Great Northern and Midland railways pass through the parish, and have stations convenient for it.

The manor of Scipelei (Shipley) was held at the time of the Domesday Survey by Malger, under Gilbert de Gand. The latter subsequently gave it to Robert de Muskham, his steward, whose grandson of the same name sold it to Robert le Vavasour. A little later it came into the possession of the Strelleys through marriage with the heiress of the Vavasours. The Strelleys had a mansion here, and in the 14th century obtained episcopal sanction to have a private chapel on their manor of Shipley. No remains of this chapel now exist, but it is mentioned by Woolley, who wrote about 1716. The estate passed through several generations of this family to Nicholas Strelley, who, in compliance with the will of Sir Philip, his father, sold it to pay the latter's debts. The purchaser was Sir George Parkham, who, in 1626, sold Shipley to Sir Edward Leche, Knt., a Master in Chancery; and from this family it passed by marriage to an ancestor of the present owner. The hall is an elegant stone structure, surrounded by an extensive and well-wooded park. The oldest part dates from 1700, and the east front was added in 1777.

The Mundy family has long been connected with Derbyshire. The first of the name on record was John Mundy, who was living in the reign of Edward I., and married the daughter of Robinget Eyre, of Hope. Later, Sir John Mundy, of Markeaton, was Lord Mayor of London in 1522-3, and from him are descended the Mundys of Shipley.

The Shipley and Cotmanhay National Schools are situated in this township. They were erected by E. M. Mundy, Esq., M.P., in 1842, and enlarged and re-modelled in 1859 by voluntary contributions. They comprise several blocks of buildings of a very attractive style of architecture, pleasantly situated on the main road from Heanor to Ilkeston. There is a total accommodation in the three departments for 505, and an average attendance of 427. Ilkeston Hospital is also in Shipley.

During the construction of the Great Northern railway a Roman urn, containing about 1,000 brass coins, was found some twelve inches below the surface. The coins were covered with verdigris, and so matted together that force had to be used to separate them. They were quickly distributed amongst the navvies and others who were near. The late Nathan Ball collected nineteen from several persons, which, on examination, proved to belong to the reigns of various Emperors from Claudius, A.D. 41, to Tacitus, A.D. 276. The urn was, unfortunately, broken, and is now in the possession of C. S. Smith, Esq., steward to the Shipley estate.

SMALLEY.

Smalley, formerly a chapelry under Morley, is now a separate parish for all ecclesiastical as well as civil purposes. Its total area is 1,717 acres, of which 1,657 acres are under assessment; ratable value £4,613, and number of inhabitants at the last census 952. It is in the Morleston and Litchurch hundred, Smalley county council and petty sessional divisions, Belper union and county court district, and deanery of Ilkeston. The principal landowners are Arthur Radford, Esq., Woodford, Essex; R. S. Wilmot Sitwell, Esq., J.P., Stainsby House; Alfred Edward M. Mundy, Esq., J.P., Shipley Hall, Derby; W. Drury-Lowe, Esq., Locko Hall; and William Richardson, Smalley.

At the time of the Domesday Survey the manor of Smalley was in the hands of the King. In the reign of Henry III. the manors of Morley, Smalley, and Kysley were held in free alms of Hugh, Earl of Chester, by the Abbot of Chester. After the dissolution of monasteries these manors were given to the newly-instituted See of Chester, from which they were alienated by Queen Elizabeth, and granted to Henry Sacheverell. James I. transferred them to the Pagets, who subsequently forfeited these estates by attainder. In 1612 these and other manors which had been granted to the Pagets, were given to Anthony Roper and his wife Maria; and a little later the manors of Morley, Smalley, and Kysley passed to the Sacheverells, whose principal seat was at Morley.

The village of Smalley, large and well built, stands by the side of the high road, six miles N.E. from Derby, and two miles from Heanor station on the Great Northern railway. Under the Local Government Act of 1884 it gives its name to a division for the election of a member of the county council. The church, which is dedicated to St. John the Baptist, was erected on the site of the old chapel in 1793; in 1844 north and south transepts were added at a cost of £350; in 1862 the transepts were removed, and north and south aisles erected, and the following year the present chancel was built by Mary Buttle Radford. This lady died in 1882, and a handsome three-light window depicting Faith, Hope, and Charity, has been erected to her memory in the south aisle. The brass lectern was presented by Mrs. Bradshaw in memory of her husband, who was rector of the parish for 13 years. The churchyard, which is kept in beautiful order, was enlarged in 1877 by half an acre of ground, given by R. S. Wilmot-Sitwell, Esq. On a stone between the two portions is inscribed—"The portion of God's Acre (half an acre) west of this stone was given by R. S. W. Sitwell, Esq., and consecrated in 1877." On the other side of the stone is—"This ancient Christian Memorial was found buried in Smalley churchyard A.D. 1880." There is also here a fine old yew tree whose age is reckoned by centuries. The living is a rectory, net yearly value £252, in the gift of R. S. Sitwell, Esq., and held by the Rev. E. Murray Robinson, M.A.

The Baptists have had a chapel here since 1785. In 1885 the interior was restored in commemoration of the centenary. The chapel will accommodate about 300. There are 70 communicants, and about 80 children attend the Sunday school. Mr. Thomas Eaton is elder and senior deacon. A school was founded here in 1712 by John and Samuel Richardson, who endowed it with land, most of which has been sold and the money invested in consols, the total income amounting to about £150 per annum. According to the original indenture there were to be 36 free scholars, who were also to receive a certain weekly allowance payable quarterly. The school and charity have been re-organised under a scheme of the Charity Commissioners dated 1879. There are two departments, a higher grade and an elementary. There are 36 scholarships of the annual value of £2 each open to boys from the parishes of Smalley, Horsley, Horsley Woodhouse, and Heanor. A sum of money is also given to each boy on leaving school for work. The school premises were enlarged in 1883 to accommodate 200. There is an average attendance of 140. A National school for girls and infants was erected in 1848, and enlarged in 1878, which is attended by 110 children on an average.

Kidsley Park, 1½ miles N.E. from Smalley, was a separate manor, granted at an early period to the Abbot of Chester. It now belongs to W. Drury-Lowe, Esq. Christopher Johnson, a celebrated medical writer in the 16th century, was born here.

CHARITIES.—Samuel Richardson, by will in 1711 left £400 to be invested in land, the rent thereof to be divided in equal portions amongst ten poor colliers, disabled or infirm, at the festivals of Christmas, Lady-day, St. John the Baptist, and Michaelmas, inhabitants of Smalley, Horsley Woodhouse, Heanor, or Mapperley. The sum of £5 is now given to each of 15 poor colliers. Edward James left 10s. yearly to the poor; Dame Goodales left a similar sum; and £2 10s. is received from the bequest of Jacinth Sacheverell. £6 10s. from Gisborne's Charity is distributed in warm clothing.

STANLEY.

This is a parish and township containing 1,098 acres of land, belonging chiefly to W. Drury-Lowe, Esq., Locko Park, who is also lord of the manor; Edwin Canner, Stanley Grange; G. F. Meynell, Esq., Langley Hall; S. R. Cox, Esq.; Samuel Potter, Stanley Hall; and F. A. Newdigate, Esq. For rating purposes it is valued at £3,549, and had, in 1891, 1,001 inhabitants. It is in Appletree hundred, county court district of Belper, deanery of Ilkeston, and union and rural district of Shardlowe. The soil is various, but generally fertile, and is chiefly devoted to dairy farming.

The village of Stanley stands in a valley six miles N.E. from Derby, and about one mile from West Hallam station, on the Great Northern railway. The church, which is dedicated to St. Andrew, was formerly a chapel under Spondon, and its chaplains were appointed by the vicar of that church. It was probably included in the grant of the mother church, to the hospital of Burton-Lazars, near Melton Mowbray. The chapel appears to have been built in the Early English period, on the site of an older edifice, a fragment of which may be seen in a round-headed doorway, now blocked up, in the south wall. It was restored, and also enlarged, in 1875, by the addition of a new chancel, in which the old Decorated east window has been rebuilt. All the other windows of the church are modern. The font is ancient, and the carved oak pulpit bears the appearance of some little antiquity.

The only monument of interest in the church is a brass in the floor, thus inscribed:—"Here lyeth the body of Sr John Bentley, Knight, when he lived of the Priory of Bredsall Parke, uppon his right hand lyeth his mother and on his left hand Charles ye sone and heire of Gervas Cuttler, Esqr., by Elizabeth his wife, the younger daughter of the said Sr John, which Sr John departed this life the first of February, 1621, Anno ætatis sue 67."

The living is a perpetual curacy worth £90 per annum, including 12 acres of glebe, in the gift of the Bishop of Southwell, and held by the Rev. T. R. Forman, M.A., St. Catherine's College, Camb.

After the dissolution of the Lazar Hospital, the monastic lands in the parish were granted to the Powtrells. In the early part of the 17th century, Stanley Grange was the residence of Lady Vaux, a friend of the Powtrells. She was an energetic and uncompromising Catholic, whose steadfast faith neither imprison-ment nor persecution could daunt.

Vesleyans and Primitive Methodists have chapels at Stanley Common; the former sect was rebuilt in 1886, and the latter in 1889. A school was erected in the village a few years ago, which receives a yearly grant from the Scargill charity. (See West Hallam.)

STANTON-BY-DALE.

Parish comprises 1,414 acres lying on the borders of Nottinghamshire, chiefly to Earl Stanhope. Its ratable value is £6,744, and the number of houses 649. It is in the hundred of Morleston and Litchurch, petty division of Smalley, county court district of Belper, union and rural Sanctuary, and deanery of Ilkeston. The parish lies at the southern end of the Midland coalfield, and associated with the coal are rich bands of iron.

Iron works were erected about 50 years ago, and in 1855 they were owned by George Crompton, Esq., banker, there being at that time three blast furnaces. Under Mr. Crompton's management the business has steadily increased, the result that now there are eight blast furnaces, foundries, and workshops, employing to about 1,500 hands. The business has been converted into a steel-making company, of which Mr. Crompton is chairman. The company has several large collieries and brickworks.

At the time of the Domesday Survey the manor of Stanton was held by Robert de Gilbert de Gand, nephew of the Conqueror. After the foundation of the neighbouring abbey of Dale, the church of Stanton and three bovates of land (the greater part of the parish) were given to that monastery. The whole of the tithes were also appropriated to it, and the curacy was supplied by the canons. On the dissolution of the abbey the manor was granted to the Babingtons, from whom it was purchased, in the reign of Elizabeth, by Michael Willoughby, Esq., and in the 18th century it passed to an ancestor of the present owner.

Stanton Hall, the residence of G. Crompton, Esq., J.P. surrounded by fine old trees, the remains of an ancient forest throughout with the electric light. Mr. Crompton is a director of the Evans' Union Bank, and was county treasurer for twenty years.

The village is pleasantly situated on an eminence on the Erewash river, nine miles E. by N. from Derby, eight miles and 1½ miles from Stanton Gate station, on the south railway. Near the centre of the village stands the octagon tower, about 9ft. in height, and bearing the date 1632. The feast is Michaelmas Day.

The church, dedicated to St. Michael, is a neat edifice with a chancel with modern north vestry and organ chamber, north porch, and a low west tower containing five bells, re-cast in 1872. The style is generally that of the Decorated period, with traces of an earlier edifice. The tower is a later addition in the Perpendicular style. A trefoil-headed piscina remains in the south wall. Built into the outer wall on the north side are three fragments of crosses. The nave is separated from the north aisle by three octagonal pillars. At the east end of the aisle there was formerly a piscina remains, but not in its original position. The chancel is a mural monument to Matthew Pilkington, LL.D., of Ashfield, who was buried here in 1765, amongst many of his ancestors. A branch of the Lancashire Pilkingtons, was seated at Ashfield for centuries, and became extinct on the death of the above without issue. Their residence was at Stanton Manor House. On the wall of the aisle is a mural slab, inscribed "Here lyeth the body of Humphrey Wolffiston, of Stafford, and wife of Ralph Wolffiston, both in the county of Stafford, Esqrs.; she died the second day of May 1765." Above the monument are the coats of arms of the two families.

Reader, prepare for Death, loe heere I lie,
Interr'd, hence know yt thou must also die

Above the monument are the coats of arms of the two families. The monument records the death of Edward Holt, in 1606, at the age of 70. The monument was very carefully restored in 1872 at a cost of nearly £100. The church is seated with oak stalls. A painting of the entombment of the altar, is now at the east end of the aisle.

After the dissolution of Dale Abbey the tithes were appropriated, without any reservation, for the maintenance of Henry Willoughby, Bart., in 1652, gave the tithes of the church, reserving 5s. yearly to himself and his heirs. In 1702 the church land were restored to the church, and the living then was a rectory. These tithes were commuted for a yearly rent-charge of £100. Stanhope is patron, and the Rev. Wm. Fox, B.A., is the rector.

The National School was erected in 1855, and subsequently the Wesleyans have a chapel capable of seating 100, built in 1872.

CHARITIES.—In pursuance of the will of her husband, Mrs. W. erected almshouses for four persons, and in 1720 she conveyed certain lands to be applied in keeping them in repair and towards the maintenance of the almshouses. In 1735 by Mr. Gregory Gregory. The property of Sutton-in-Ashfield, containing 61a. 0r. 25p. of land, and another 0r. 25p. In 1825 there was a balance in the hands of the only surviving son, who was appointed, and two additional almshouses erected. The property of 100 acres, situated at Kilburne, is let for £8 per annum, which, with 5s. in consols, is distributed amongst the poor.

WEST HALLAM.

This interesting parish contains 1,328 acres of land adjoining the borough boundary of Ilkeston on the west, and belongs solely, glebe excepted, to Francis A. Newdigate, Esq., who is also lord of the manor. Its ratable value is £4,883, and the population, in 1891, was 564. It is in the hundred of Morleston and Litchurch, petty sessional division of Smalley, county court district of Belper, union and rural district of Shardlow, and deanery of Ilkeston. It is under the jurisdiction of a parish council of six members, and, in conjunction with Kirk Hallam, elects one guardian and district councillor.

The parish lies within the Midland coalfield, and two seams—the Deep Soft and the Deep Hard—are worked by the West Hallam Colliery Company.

Dr. Cox, in his very valuable work "The Churches of Derbyshire," tells us that West Hallam was one of the 54 lordships given by William the Conqueror to Gilbert de Gant, his nephew, and that subsequently it came to be regarded as an appendage to the manor of Newark, which was conferred on the bishopric of Lincoln in the reign of Henry I. He further observes that up to the time of the abolition of feudal tenures in the 17th century, the lords of the manor of West Hallam always rendered service to the Bishop of Lincoln. The lordly family of Cromwell held it under the bishops for about three centuries, and it was then purchased by Thomas Powtrel, a younger son of the ancient family of that name, seated at Thrumpton, Notts. After the change of religion at the Reformation, the Powtrells remained true to their first love, and for this adherence to the old faith they suffered grievously both from repeated fines and imprisonment in the reign of Elizabeth. Their hall at West Hallam was a famous hiding place for the persecuted priests in the reigns of Elizabeth and James.

"The waves of that cruel sham, the Titus Oates "spread even to this quiet village. On the night of Mr George Busby, a relative of Mrs. Powtrel's, was seized Hallam, and condemned at the Derby Assizes to be hung, for the simple crime of being a Roman priest. After a sentence was commuted to one of banishment. Father V priest aged 73, who had been 42 years upon the mission Leicestershire about the same time. Evidence being gathered mass at West Hallam Hall by some apostate priest was condemned to death. The capital sentence was not alternately confined in the gaols of Derby and Leicester, fever at the latter town in 1692."

From the Powtrells the manor and advowson passed were purchased by Fras. Newdigate in 1821. The old about the middle of last century, and a farmhouse, were attached, built on the site. These stood till 1833, when the site added to the churchyard. The present hall is in the Domestic Gothic style, completed in 1877 from the designs of Idridgehay. It adjoins the churchyard on the south side.

The village is situated about two miles from Ilkeston from Derby, and about a quarter of a mile from the station the Great Northern railway. The church, dedicated to St. edifice of stone, and consists of chancel with north chapel porch, and a west tower. There is no record of the foundation reason to believe that it was built by one of the Cromwells as the north arcade is of the Early English style that prevails and the chancel arch belongs to the same period. The tower to have been added about 50 years later, when the Decorated evolved out of the Early English. Further alterations in the Perpendicular period (1399-1547), of which style are the tower and the north chapel, now an organ chamber. A new chancel was effected in 1855 at a cost of nearly £1,000, previous edifice contained high-backed pews, whitewashed walls, and all their accompanying incongruities." The ancient stained glass of the clerestory windows, representing the half-length of Christ with a book in the left hand and a club over the right shoulder are the words "Sanctam Ecclesiam Catholicam, Sanctorum Holy Catholic Church, the Communion of Saints). The figure of St. Less, who was beaten to death with a club; and it is in the clerestory windows were originally filled with the figures bearing one of the articles of the creed. There are stained glass in one of the windows of the south chancel wall. The west window possesses special interest, as it is the work of Robert Evans, father of the celebrated authoress who wrote the plume of "George Elliot." A few ancient monuments on the slab, bearing the incised figure of a knight in plate armor, Thomas Powtrel, who died in 1484; and on the north side a raised monument under a canopy, bearing the effigies of a man and a woman. Above the figures is this inscription:—"Here lie the Effigies of Esq., Lord of this Towne and patron of this church, who was the daughter of Francis Shirley of Staunton in ye County of Derby, whom he had issue 3 sonnes and 4 daughters, which he died the 10th September, Anno 1598." On the front of the tomb are the effigies of two of the sons appear in armour, and one in a university gown. On the floor, and partly hidden by the choir stalls, is the effigy of the Rev. John Scargill, the munificent founder of the Wesleyan Chapel, bearing the following inscription:—

"Here lieth the body of John Scargill, Gent., Rector of this Church.
He died a Batchelor January 17, 1662.

He built a Schoole here for XII. children poore,
VI. of this Towne, and VI. of III. Townes more,
To whom he gave, besides their learning free,
IXd. a week to each boy paid to be. Aged 74."

A grateful posterity has filled the west window with stained glass, and erected a very fine organ to his memory. The reredos, of stone and marble, is a memorial of Francis Newdigate, who died in 1866. The sacarium has been laid with beautiful encaustic tiles, and the altar steps are of white alabaster, from old monuments found under the floor of the church. The tower contains a peal of six bells, three of which were cast in 1876, in memory of the Rev. C. J. Newdigate. The earliest date of the registers is 1538. The living is a rectory, valued in the King's Book at £8, now worth £270 a year, with residence, in the gift of F. A. Newdigate, Esq., and held by the Rev. Nigel Madan, M.A. The tithes were commuted in 1840 for a rent charge of £256 10s. 8d., and there are 51½ acres of glebe.

The old custom of carrying funeral garlands seems to have lingered here long after it had fallen into disuse in the rest of the county. A contributor to the "Ilkeston Pioneer," in the first year of its publication (1853), speaks of having often seen these garlands carried to the church, and afterwards therein suspended. "I have counted," he says, "more than thirty of these rustic mementoes hanging over the piers."

The school was founded by the Rev. John Scargill in 1662, and endowed with the sum of £540. This money was invested in land at Eastwood and elsewhere. The school premises were rebuilt in 1832, and a room for girls and infants was added in 1852. The school was founded for the free education of twelve poor children, who were also to be paid ninepence per week, but as the charity lands increased in value the benefits of the school were extended to a greater number of children, and in 1876 there were 66 in receipt of the benefits of the charity. In that year a new scheme was prepared by the Charity Commissioners reorganising the charity, and transferring its management from the old trustees to ten governors, five ex-officio and five representative. Sixty-six scholarships have been instituted, of the yearly value of £2, which is expended in clothing those to whom the scholarships are allotted and providing them with books. The sum of not less than £90 a year is applied to exhibitions at Derby Grammar School, Trent College, or Risley Grammar School, tenable for three years, and open for competition by boys and girls who have been for not less than two years in some public elementary school in the parishes of West Hallam, Stanley, Mapperley, or Dale Abbey.

WILNE.

This is an ecclesiastical parish, comprising the civil parishes and townships of Draycott-with-Church Wilne, and Hopwell, in the hundred of Morleston and Litchurch, petty sessional division and county court district of Derby, union and rural district of Shardlow, and deanery of Ilkeston.

Draycott and Church Wilne form a united civil parish, containing 1,451½ acres, lying on the north bank of the river Derwent; its ratable value is £8,613, and the population in 1891 was 1,032. The principal landowners are the Earl of Harrington, who is also lord of the manor; Henry Johnson, Ruth Bosworth, Edward Clay, W. H. Scott, Samuel Macdonald, John & James Winfield, the Rev. A. R. Gouldie, W. C. Beeston, John Frost, Exors. of J. H. Towle, Exors. of T. Cooper, Joseph Wheatcroft, Henry Thompson, Marcus Astle, Miss Grace Harrison, M. A. Cooper, George Tebbutt, Mrs. Sutton, and Henry Hudston.

Church Wilne, or Little Wilne, is a small village and hamlet, situate on the bank of the Derwent, which divides it from Great Wilne and Shardlow, containing the church, a cotton factory, and about fourteen houses, 7½ miles S.E. from Derby, and one mile from Draycott station on the Derby and Nottingham branch of the Midland railway. The manor is included in that of Sawley, which was conferred upon the prebendary of Sawley in the early part of the ninth century, and it is held with the other prebendal lands on lease by the Earl of Harrington.

The church, dedicated to St. Chad, is without doubt one of the oldest foundations in the county. It was conferred on the prebendary of Sawley in 822 by Ethelwald, Bishop of Lichfield, and was then possessed of full parochial rights; but there is reason to believe that there was a church here two centuries before that date. St. Chad, who was Bishop of Lichfield, and died in the year 672, is said to have had a station here, where he preached to the pagan Saxons and baptised them in the river Derwent. It is, therefore, probable that a church was built on the spot where the preaching cross stood, if not during the life time of the saint certainly very shortly afterwards; but subsequent rebuildings and restorations have robbed it of all appearance of great antiquity. It possesses, however, one relic of the early Saxon church in its font, which in the opinion of competent authorities dates back some twelve centuries. The bowl is circular, 23 inches in height and 26 inches in diameter, and stands on a moulded base of later date. It is covered with curious carving; apparently in six compartments, symbolizing the triumph of Christianity over Paganism. Around the bottom is a band of carving, now much worn and mutilated, which some suppose to have been a Runic inscription. A very careful drawing of this font and all its details is given in Dr. Cox's excellent work, "The Churches of Derbyshire."

The church, which is chiefly in the 14th century architecture, consists of chancel, nave with clerestory, south aisle and chapel, south porch, and a low massive tower at the west end with embattled parapet. The nave is divided from the aisle by an arcade of four arches resting on octagonal pillars. At the east end of the aisle, and divided from it by an elaborately carved oak screen, is the memorial chapel of Sir John Willoughby, now used as a vestry. This chapel was erected in 1622, and the screen bears the date 1624. It is lighted by three windows of three lights each, filled with stained glass representing the Nativity, Crucifixion, and Ascension. Another oak screen, much older and plainer than the above, crosses the chancel arch. The roof is nearly flat, and of massive oak, and two of the old oak box pews remain, though somewhat cut down. The other seats are open. At the west end of the nave is a gallery containing an organ. Wilne was the burial place of the Willoughbys of Risley, but many of their monuments have disappeared. In the chancel floor is an alabaster slab bearing the incised figures of a man in plate armour and his lady. Round the margin runs a Latin inscription to the following effect:—"Here lie Hugh Willoughby of Risley, Esquire, and Isabella his wife, daughter of Gervase Clifton, Knight, who died 12th of September, A.D. 1491. And Isabella died the 3rd of May, A.D. 1462; on whose souls may God have mercy. Amen." Against the north wall of the chancel is another Willoughby monument—a granite slab, with small inlaid brass figures of a gentleman, a lady, and a youth in kneeling attitude. Below the figures is the following inscription:—"Pray for the soules of Hugh Willoughby of Rysley, Squire, and Anne his wyff, daughter of Richard Wentworth, and Thomas Willoughby, son of the said Hugh Willoughby." Date 1508. In a canopied recess in the north wall of the side chapel are the recumbent life-sized effigies of a knight and his lady. Below them, on the front of the tomb, are their two sons and their two daughters, kneeling. It is the monument of John Willoughby, of Risley, Knight, who died in 1605, and Frances his wife, who died in 1602. The monument was erected by Henry Willoughby, Bart., their eldest son, in 1622. Here also is the memorial of Anne Willoughby—a very handsome piece of work in black and white marble, ornamented with the figures of two cherubs weeping, and surmounted by an urn of fire. The inscription is:—"To the memory of Ann, daughter and coheirress of Sir Henry Willoughby, of Risley, in the Co. of Derby, Bart. Her first marriage was with Sir Thos. Aston, of Aston, in the Co. of Chester, Bart., by whom she had Sir Willoughby Aston, Magdalen, wife of Robt. Burdett, of Bramcote, in the Co. of Warwick, Esq., and Mary. Her second marriage was with the Honble. Anchitel Gray, Esq., son of Henry, Earl of Stamford, by whom she had issue one sonne and one daughter, namely, Willoughby and Elizabeth. In hope of a blessed resurrection she ended her pious life the 2nd day of June, 1688, in ye 74th yeare of her age."

There are also the memorials of several other families in the church. On the north wall of the chancel is the monument of Henry Kayes, Esq., of Hopwell, who died in 1733; and members of the families of Tillard, Cleator, Parkinson, Bonsall, Jowett, and Newton, are commemorated in mural tablets on the walls of the nave.

The tower contains a ring of four bells, three of which bear 17th century dates, and one is apparently older. The registers date from 1540. The living, formerly a perpetual curacy, was constituted a vicarage in 1865, now worth £300, in the gift of the Bishop of Southwell, and held by the Rev. Thomas Browning Mundy, M.A. (Durham.) The tithe rent-charge is £60, and there are ten acres of glebe.

Draycott is a large village on the bank of the Derwent, one mile N.W. from Church Wilne, and a quarter-of-a-mile from the station of its own name on the Derby and Nottingham branch of the Midland railway. The cotton trade was established here in 1800 by Mr. Towle, and long carried on by that family. The mill is now occupied by the Fairbank Wood Rim Co., Ltd., formed in 1894, for the manufacture of wood rims for cycle wheels; but the principal industry of the place is the lace and curtain manufacture, in which a considerable number of the inhabitants are employed. There was formerly also a silk mill, but this is now unoccupied. A gas company was formed in 1887, to supply Draycott and Breaston with that illuminant. There are chapels in the village belonging to the Wesleyans and Primitive Methodists. The former body built their first chapel in 1800; the present edifice was erected in 1830.

A School Board was formed in 1876, who took over the old parochial schools built by subscription in 1854. There are two departments, mixed and infants, with a total accommodation for 248 children, and an average attendance of 192.

HOPWELL is a small township in the ecclesiastical parish of Ilkeston. The area is 617 acres, ratable value £745, and population 48. Mr. J. H. Esq., is sole owner and lord of the manor. The Hall, a large house, is situated in a park of about 90 acres. It is the residence of the owner.

MID PARLIAMENTARY DIVISION.ALDERWASLEY.

Alderwasley, pronounced Arrarsley, is an extensive township and chapelry in the parish, petty sessional divisional, county court district, and rural deanery of Wirksworth electoral division of Crich, poor law union of Belper, and hundred of Appletree. There are 3,094½ acres of land under assessment, the ratable value of which is £6,053; the population in 1891 was 337. A. F. Hurt, Esq., J.P., D.L., Alderwasley Hall, is lord of the manor and owner of the whole township with the exception of 18½ acres belonging to the churches of Belper and Turn-ditch. The soil is sandy, lying upon gritstone, and is chiefly in pasture. The surface is pleasingly diversified by hill and dale, and 700 acres of woodland add their charm to the scenery. The views from the higher grounds, especially from the Bear Inn and Alderwasley Hall, are extensive and beautiful. Spread out before the view are green fields and waving woods, and in the distance rises the isolated mass of limestone on which Crich Stand is erected. Gritstone of good quality is quarried at two places on the Whatstandwell and Wirksworth road. A coal seam extends into the parish, and below it is a band of good clay which is brought to bank and manufactured into pipes, bricks, tiles, &c. The mine is worked by a drift. About a mile above the Halfpenny Bridge, which spans the river Derwent, are the wire mills of Messrs. Richard Johnson and Nephew, established in 1874 as a branch from their forges and wire mills in Manchester. The works comprise a large block of stone buildings, which stretch upwards of 300 yards along the bank of the river, and are driven by two turbines, probably the largest in England. About 250 workmen are employed here. The firm has been in existence upwards of a century. Near the works are the ruins of a blast furnace, erected in 1764, for the manufacture of iron for nails and sheets. Charcoal was exclusively used, and the ore was brought by packhorses.

There is no mention of Alderwasley in Domesday Book, being probably accounted part of Duffield forest or frith. In the 36th year of Henry III. (1252) William de Ferrers, Earl of Derby, had a grant of free warren in his lands of Arlewaskale (Alderwasley), and soon afterwards the manor was annexed to the Duchy of Lancaster. The family of Fawne or Fowne had an estate here distinct from the manor, called Shining Cliff Park, which was granted to them by Edmund, Earl of Lancaster; and it continued in the male line of this family till the death of Thomas Fawne in the reign of Edward IV. It then passed to his daughter and heiress Joan, who married Thomas Lowe in 1471. The Lowes held important offices in the Royal household. Anthony, who succeeded to the estate, was standard bearer and gentleman of the bedchamber to Henry VIII., Edward VI., and Queen Mary, and the first-named king in 1528 grandfather of Alderwasley, which had, up to that time, belonged to the Edward Lowe, his great grandson, espoused the Royal cause at the times of Charles I., and when the Parliamentary party obtained the day he had to compound for his estates by the payment of £22,000 in those days. John Lowe, his grandson, was High Sheriff of the county and dying without issue, his estates were inherited by his son, Nicholas Hurt, Esq., of Casterne, Staffordshire, from which they descended to the present owner.

Alderwasley Hall, the seat of Albert Frederick Hurt, is a large and substantial mansion of stone, supposed to stand on the site of the hunting seat of the Earls of Lancaster. The house has been considerably enlarged during the minority of the present owner, between the years 1796 and 1800. It is delightfully situated on 1,000 acres, amidst wooded heights and grassy slopes, between which a brook pursues its sinuous course, feeding fish ponds, finally emptying into the Trent. Besides a herd of fallow deer, there is in the park a small number of animals originally brought from the Faroe Islands by the late John Hurt.

Mr. Hurt is the eldest surviving son of the late John Hurt, of Alderwasley, and Cecilia Emily, daughter of the late Robert Hurt. He was born 7th March, 1835; married 1862, Alice, third daughter of Frederick Peter Delmé-Radcliffe, Esq., of Hitchin Park. He has issue four sons and one daughter. Mr. Hurt, who was in the Royal Navy, is Major and Hon. Lieut.-Colonel of the 1st Regiment, retired. He has the Baltic, Turkish, and Crimean Medals, and the Order of the Medjidie fifth class.

The church, which stands just within the park-gates, is a building of stone, built by the late Francis Edward Hurt, Esq., in 1810. It is cruciform in plan, with a tower at the west side of the nave. A lofty pointed arch resting on fluted pilasters separates the nave from the chancel. In the east wall is a three-light pointed window filled with stained glass representing the Ascension, the Last Supper, Adoration of the Kings, and the Resurrection. Above the altar is a stone reredos of three compartments filled with marble bas-reliefs. The central compartment contains a representation of Christ blessing little children. The side compartments contain the sculptured emblems of the four Evangelists. The communion table is richly clothed, and the floor is laid with marble. A silver communion plate is of solid silver. In 1846 some men employed by E. Hurt, Esq., were digging up the roots of an old tree when they found an earthenware jar containing about 816 silver coins of the reigns of Elizabeth, James I., and Charles I. The clippings were retained as curios by Mr. Hurt, and the rest were sold. The chalice, paten, and alms dish now in use in the church were given by Mr. Hurt. A monument in enamelled slate to the memory of the late Francis and Elizabeth his wife, and on the opposite wall is a memorial to the late Francis and Henry Francis Eden, sons of the late Francis Hurt. The former was killed in the attack on the Redan, and the latter at the battle of Inkermann. Near this is a marble tablet to the memory of Francis Hurt, Esq., who died in 1861. The nave is furnished with a pulpit and reading desk are of carved oak, and the east window is a fine piece of brass work in memory of Amelia, wife of Francis Hurt, Esq., who died in 1882. An organ was placed in the north aisle by the late owner of Alderwasley in 1880. It was built by Messrs. Sheffield, and cost, including motor, £477, and laying on additional. The incumbent is appointed by A. F. Hurt, Esq., and pays £140 yearly with residence, and held by the Rev. Charles St. Edmund's Hall, Oxford.

The old chapel stands a few hundred yards distant. It was rebuilt in the reign of Henry VIII. by Thomas Lowe and others, on the site of an older one, probably the domestic chapel of the Founes. It was reverently permitted to stand after the erection of the present church from an impression that it had been consecrated, the bell turret and a transept only, modern additions, being taken down. In 1883 Mr. Hurt restored the old building which was fast becoming ruinous, and enclosed a piece of ground in front as a cemetery, and it is now used as a private mortuary chapel. The building is oblong, and possesses but little architectural interest. The east window, however, is perhaps unique. It consists of two three-light square headed windows, one above the other. At either side of the upper one is a grotesque head. Over the south entrance is a sculptured stone escutcheon, much defaced by the weather. The priest's door on the same side is walled up. Above it, cut in alabaster and now protected by a glass, is the coat of arms of the Lowe family. High up on the same wall are some corbel heads, which probably belonged to the first chapel. Against the south wall lies part of a sculptured circular font discovered by Miss Hurt at Littleover, and also a holy water stoup, which was used as a pig trough by the late custodian of the chapel.

The village of Alderwasley consists of a number of good stone-built houses, about two miles from Wirksworth, and $1\frac{1}{2}$ from Whatstandwell station, on the Midland railway. A school was erected here in 1843, by the late F. E. Hurt, Esq., at a cost of £1,500; average attendance 44. About a quarter of a mile distant is a small hamlet called Little Hayes.

Stretching up the ridge away beyond the park is Alderwasley Wood. Here, in the face of a precipitous rock not easily approached, is Bat House Cave. It was carefully examined in 1884 by the late Dr. Dun and Mr. Crozier, who with Mr. Hurt were at the expense of excavating the six feet of accumulated earth that covered the rocky floor. During the progress of the work were found fragments of very early pottery, a fibula or brooch, and a piece of raddle, showing that the cave had been occupied at least temporarily by the ancient Britons. In the lateral pillars at the entrance were discovered the grooves or slots for the reception of a strong wooden bar or barricade. At a little distance a very fine specimen of a stone hammer head was found, and is now in the possession of J. Thewlis Johnson, Esq., of Oak Hurst. This commodious mansion was erected in 1848, and enlarged in 1888 and 1894. It occupies an elevated situation on the right bank of the Derwent, and is surrounded by a small park. The house is illuminated throughout by the electric light. The dynamo is driven by a small turbine worked by water supplied from a reservoir in the wood.

Hard by, near an old disused quarry, is another cave, which was used as a blacksmith's shop when millstones were quarried here, before the introduction of French stones.

On a commanding eminence, in another part of the wood, is a famous yew tree, whose spreading branches, though damaged a few years ago by fire, still overlap one another and touch the ground. In a cone-shaped hut under this leafy canopy lived Luke and Kate Kenny, charcoal burners. Here they brought up a family of eight children, without ever having entered a house except for the purchase of necessaries. The portraits of the couple, Luke at the age of 96 and Kate 88, were painted by James Ward, R.A., in 1813, and are now in the drawing-room at Alderwasley Hall.

ALFRETON.

This is an extensive and ancient parish, comprising chiefly to C. R. Palmer Morewood, Esq., J.P., who is also in the hundred of Scarsdale, petty sessional division, deanery of Alfreton, and union of Belper. A Local Board was formed in 1868, and in 1888 the district under its control was consolidated. It now includes an area of 15,600 acres, with a population of 15,000. Under the Local Government Act of 1894, the Local Board has become an Urban District Council, whose district is co-extensive with the parish. There are five wards, viz. :—Alfreton, returning six councillors; Riddings, six; Swanwick, two; and Ironville, one. At the last election of two County Councillors. The total ratable property within the urban district is £46,809.

The earliest mention of Alfreton occurs in Wulfrie's grant of Burton Abbey, by which the manor was given to the monks, for at the time of the Domesday survey, circa 1086, Elstretune, as the name was written by the Norman scribe under Roger de Busli. This Ingram was the immediate ancestor of Fitz Ranulph, lord of Alfreton, and founder of Beauchief. His descendants styled themselves "de Alfreton," and on the death of the great grandson, in 1269, the manor descended to his son, Chaworth. The latter wielded considerable influence, and was summoned to Parliament as a baron the same year. William of this branch of the family, left an only daughter and heiress, Ormond, Esq., in the reign of Henry VII. The only heiress of a daughter and heiress, who brought the manor to her son, Dethick. From the grandson of the latter it was purchased by Zouch, Esq., of Codnor. It passed through two generations, and was sold, in 1618, to Robert Sutton, Esq., of Aram, in years later it was purchased by the Morewoods. George Morewood, who died in 1792, was the last heir male, and, having no surviving issue, he bequeathed the estate to his widow, who married Henry Case, rector of Ladbrooke. This gentleman assumed the surname of Morewood, and there being no issue of the marriage, William Palmer succeeded to the estate as male heir to his maternal aunt. He assumed, in 1825, the name and arms of Morewood, and the present owner is his grandson.

Alfreton Hall, the seat of Charles Rowland Palmer Morewood, Esq., is a large and handsome mansion, seated on an eminence within a well-wooded park. The home of the early lords of Alfreton was pulled down after the erection of the present hall by Rowland Morewood.

The Holmes family long held land in the parish. Alfreton House, their residence for several generations, is a quaint, old-fashioned structure, with stone mullioned windows, bearing the date 1658.

The town is pleasantly situated on the east side of the park, 14 miles N. from Derby, 10 miles S. from Chesterfield, and is easily accessible by rail either from the station of its own name, on the Erewash Valley branch, or from that of Wingfield, on the Derby and Chesterfield line. It is a place of considerable antiquity, dating back, if we may believe tradition, to the time of King Alfred, from whom it is said to have received its name. Its market, now held on Friday, was granted by charter in 1251, together with a three-days' fair at the festival of St. Margaret. The feast is held on the Sunday nearest to July 31st, a cheese fair on the 7th October, and a statute hirings on November 24th. A market hall was erected by the lord of the manor in 1874; this, together with the market rights, was leased to a limited liability company, whose interests were purchased by the Local Board in 1893. The streets are lined with many good shops and business premises. One of the most imposing of these is Crompton and Evans' Union Bank, a handsome structure of brick, with stone mullioned windows. It was built in 1892, on the site of the Gables, formerly the village inn; and when this was being pulled down there was found a tradesman's token, bearing the legend, "Cornelius Launder, His Halfpenny, 1661." Gasworks were erected by a company of shareholders in 1848, and waterworks were constructed by the Local Board in 1877. There are now three storage reservoirs, with a total capacity of 26,224,890 gallons.

Though small the town is a busy centre of industrial activity. Coal is abundant, and was worked on the chantry lands as early as the 14th century, and a considerable number of the inhabitants are employed in the ironworks. Furnaces were first erected here by Messrs. Appleby and Co., in 1792. Shortly afterwards the works of Messrs. Oakes and Co., were established, and are still in active operation.

The church, dedicated to St. Martin, is a large, massive, and noble-looking edifice, comprising chancel (with vestry on the north side), nave, north and south aisles, south porch, and tower at the west end. There is no mention of a church at Alfreton in Domesday Book, nor are there any architectural indications to be found in the present edifice that take it further back than the Early English style that prevailed in the latter part of the 12th century. The arcades of the aisles are in the Decorated Gothic style, and the tower is an example of early Perpendicular work of the 15th century. The church was thoroughly restored, at an expense of £3,300, in 1868, when the north aisle was taken down and rebuilt, a bay added to the east end of each aisle and nave, and the chancel rebuilt further eastward. The chancel window, which occupied nearly the whole of the east end, was removed to the west end of the nave. The present east window is a very handsome one of five lights, with traceried head, filled with stained glass, representing the salient events in the life of Our Saviour. Beneath this is a very handsome reredos of variegated Derbyshire marble and alabaster, divided into seven trefoil-headed arched panels; and the walls on each side are encased with Minton tiles. A stone screen spans the chancel arch, dividing the chancel from the nave. A peculiar feature of the interior is the spacious north aisle, which is wider than the nave. There are several memorial windows interesting of the latter is a large incised slab, bearing the Chaworth impaled. On a brass is a long Latin inscript genealogy of John Ormond, Esq., and Joan Chaworth, b 1503, she in 1507. There are also monuments to the More other families. There are five bells in the tower, and a fixed against the east window of the bell chamber.

This church was given by Robert Fitz-Ranulph to founded at Beauchief, and the vicarage was held by one of the abbey. At the Reformation the rectory and patronage were given to Leake, and from this family they were purchased, in 1673 by John Swanwick, and John Toplady. In 1779 the trustees of George the rectorial tithes by auction, the chief purchasers being Thomas and the advowson of the vicarage was bought by Mr. More. A chantry, dedicated to the Blessed Virgin, at the east end of the church, founded and endowed by the lords of the manor; and there is a chapel at the east end of the south aisle. The living is a vicarage, with a residence, in the gift of C. R. Palmer-Morewood, Esq., and James Arthur Hervey, B.A. The church will accommodate 1,000 free. For the convenience of the increasing population, Mission houses were erected in Sleetmore Road and Mansfield Road.

The spiritual needs of the inhabitants are also met by various religious bodies. The Catholics were without any place of worship till 1882, when their present small church was built. The structure of brick faced with cement, and is served from the Roman Catholic Mission. Methodism was established here in the early part of the nineteenth century. There are now two chapels in the town; the Ebenezer, in Nottingham Road, in 1893 an organ was added, at an expense of £150; the Wesleyan, was erected at an outlay of £876. Alfreton is the head of the district. Rev. Timothy Archer is the minister.

Dissent has found a home in Alfreton since the middle of the nineteenth century. The Rev. John Oldfield, who was ejected from the living of Alfreton for his nonconformity, spent the latter part of his life at Alfreton, and of considerable learning, and published several theological works, followed by six successive pastors. The Old Meeting House, in Alfreton Hall estate. This was superseded in 1854 by the Wesleyan Congregational Chapel, built at a cost of £1,024. The style is Gothic, and the details have been well carried out. The edifice consists of a nave and a tower flanking the front, in which is the principal entrance. There are mural tablets to Mrs. Mary Roberts, who died in 1888; and to Gallsworthy and his wife, who died in 1888 and 1889. The Wesleyans erected their first chapel in 1809. The present chapel was built in 1885, at a cost of £850. It is in the Ripley Road. The Methodist Free Church is a commodious structure, erected in 1850, at a cost of £650, to seat 350.

National Schools were established in 1845, at a cost of £1,000, enlarged in 1887, and a new infants' school was opened in 1887, to accommodate 771.

RIDDINGS is an extensive village and ecclesiastical parish, comprising Greenhill Lane, Pyebridge, and half of Somersdale, 2,200 acres, and having a population of 5,615. Messrs. Henry and James Oakes are the principal landowners. There is a chapel at Riddings dedicated to St. Mary Magdalen, but the date of its foundation, nor is it known when it was demolished. In the will of Hugh Revell, of Shirland, dated 1504, and the petitioners, in 1650, return it as "fit to be disused," intimate that it was in a very dilapidated condition.

The village (Riddings) is situated three miles S.W. by S. from Alfreton, and a mile from Pyebridge station on the Midland railway. A church, dedicated to St. James, was erected here in 1833. It is a handsome edifice of cut stone, in a Gothic style, consisting of chancel with vestry on the north side, nave, and western embattled tower with pinnacles and an octagonal spire. The chancel is built and the church re-seated and renovated in 1884, at a cost of nearly £1,000. The east window is a memorial of the late James Oakes, Esq., and below this is a very handsome alabaster reredos bearing sculptured figures of angels, shields, and the implements of the Passion. Two former vicars are commemorated in tablets in the nave; and there are also monuments to the late James Oakes and Sarah, widow of James Oakes, Esq., of Riddings House, erected by public subscription. The nave is lighted by three two-light windows on either side, each filled with stained glass and presented in affectionate remembrance of departed worth. The tower contains a peal of ten tubular bells. The living is a vicarage in the gift of the Vicar of Alfreton, within which ancient parish Riddings is situated; the Rev. Henry Rogers, vicar. The net income is £15, with residence. In 1884, Mr. T. H. Oakes endowed the living with £1,200, and the Ecclesiastical Commissioners gave a like sum, and all bench rents were abolished. The church will seat 700.

The Congregational Church was founded in 1821, and enlarged in 1840. A schoolroom was built in 1864, and an additional schoolroom was erected in 1871. The church was re-modelled, re-pewed and an organ erected in 1883, and 10 years later a considerable extension of the building and other alterations took place. New heating apparatus was put in, and stained glass windows inserted, the gift of Messrs. Shaw and others. Marble tablets on the wall commemorate the pastorates of the Rev Thomas Colledge and the Rev. Augustus M. Butler, both of whom lie buried in the adjoining churchyard. The United Methodist Free Church is a commodious structure of brick with stone dressings. It is of a brid style of architecture but pleasing in appearance, and was erected in 1876, at a cost of £2,500. There are two storeys in front and three at the back, the upper one of which is allotted to the caretaker. The chapel is neatly furnished with open benches of pitchpine, and a gallery carried round three sides increases the accommodation. A chaste marble tablet commemorates Charles Brown, of Rehwood, a local preacher who died in 1881, and bequeathed to the Riddings Unit the sum of £550. The old chapel, built in 1854, is now used as a Sunday school. The Baptists erected their first chapel here in 1806, and rebuilt and enlarged it in 1846, at a cost of £400. In 1879, a gallery was added at an expense of £240, and the ground floor was re-furnished, heating apparatus put in, and some other improvements effected 10 years ago which cost £223. The first Wesleyan Methodist Chapel was founded in 1817. This was rebuilt in 1838, and recently the building has been considerably enlarged, altered and improved, at a cost of about £1,000. Adjoining is the Sunday school—a good two-storey building, erected in 1871.

The National Schools, built in 1845, at a cost of £2,000, form an imposing row of buildings. The boys occupy the ground floor, and the girls the upper storey, there being accommodation for 400 boys and the same number of girls. The rooms are well furnished and lighted, and pictures, specimens of various natural and artificial productions, adorn the walls. A commodious infant school was erected in 1883, in West Street. There is accommodation for 300, and there are 321 names on the books. On the walls are tastefully displayed specimens of the children's work.

A Gas Company was formed in 1888, and works erected for the supply of that illuminant. A market was established many years ago, but from its close proximity to Alfreton it is of little importance. Riddings forms part of the Overcotes and Riddings ward of the Alfreton urban district council.

Greenhill Lane is a populous district adjoining Riddings. It appears to have been on or near the track of a Roman way, and on three several occasions, in 1730, 1740, and 1749, a considerable quantity of Roman coins was found. In the enlarged on several occasions during the past century. It is surrounded by a well wooded park of over thirty acres, and contains a fine collection of old carved-oak furniture, and oil painting by Wright, of Derby. The Old Hall, the earlier residence of the family, is a plain stone building, with some modernised windows, facing the Derby road. Inscribed on a stone are some initials, and the date 1675,

Coal mining is an important industry, and a considerable number of the inhabitants are thus employed. The coals are of excellent quality, and bring a high price in the market. Another industry in which many of the villagers are engaged is the manufacture of hosiery and ladies' underwear, for which Swanwick has now quite a reputation; and as evidence of this we may state that Mr. Stephen Elliott, of Swanwick, was entrusted with an order to specially manufacture a large quantity of silk hosiery which was to form part of the wedding trousseau of Her Serene Highness the Princess May of Teck.

A church, dedicated to St. Andrew, was erected here in 1859, chiefly through the instrumentality of the late Francis Wright, Esq., of Osmaston Manor. It is a handsome Gothic edifice of cut stone, and consists of chancel with vestry on the north, nave, with north and south aisles, and bell turret on the western gable. The interior is elegantly furnished in pitchpine to accommodate 420 persons, 316 seats being free. The pulpit, lectern, and reading desk are of oak, beautifully carved. The parish allotted to the church includes the village of Swanwick and part of Sleetmore Lane, containing a total population of 1,934. The living is a vicarage, worth £175, in the gift of trustees, and held by the Rev. S. A. Pelly, B.A. (T.C.D.), F.G.S.

The Baptist Chapel is a plain building of brick, erected in 1796, and enlarged in 1828. It was reseated in 1890, and with the gallery will accommodate 600. On the inner wall is a slab inscribed, "In memory of the Rev. Wm. Fletcher, who, in the year 1794, introduced the Gospel into this his native village and afterwards at Riddings, and by whose zealous, disinterested, and self-denying labour the two places of worship have been erected: and who, after presiding over the church for 37 years, entered his rest, January 14th, 1831, in his 84th year. This tablet is erected by his friends as a memorial of his worth. Also of Susannah, his wife, who died January 27th, 1836, in her 95th year." There is also on the wall an oil painting of the reverend gentleman. Adjoining the chapel is a small burial ground containing many pretty tombstones. The Primitive Methodist Chapel is an attractive-looking structure, rebuilt on the old site at a cost of £800. It will seat 350. The United Methodist Free Church was erected in 1850, and new fronted and re-furnished in 1875 at a cost of £520. It will accommodate 350, and is in Ripley circuit.

A School was founded here in 1740 by George Turner, who endowed it with land for the free education of 40 children, those of Swanwick and Greenhill Lane always to have the preference. There are excellent schools in connection with the church, providing accommodation for 600 children, and attended by 505.

A Cemetery, 12 acres in extent, was laid out at Lea Brooks a year ago, by the Alfreton Local Board, and a Mortuary Chapel, erected at a total cost of £500.

CHARITIES.—The sum of £27 is received yearly from a farm at Birchwood, left by Rowland Morewood, in 1647, and £146 8s., the interest of £5,324 deposited with the Ecclesiastical Commissioners. This money is distributed amongst the poor of Alfreton at Christmas.

BELPER.

This is a prosperous market town and civil parish, situated on the eastern bank of the river Derwent, eight miles N. of Derby and 12 miles E. of Ashbourne. It is in the hundred of Appletree; rural deanery of Duffield; and is the head of a union, petty sessional division, and county court district; and with Heage forms a division for the election of a member of the county council. The total area of the township is 3,182 acres, ratable value £32,878, and population (1891) 10,420. The principal landowners are the Exors. of George Henry Strutt, Esq., Timothy White, Esq., and Mrs. Bannister.

The surface is picturesquely diversified by gentle eminences and woodlands; the soil, clayey and stoney, lies on gritstone and clay, and is mostly in pasture.

The earliest mention of the manor of Belper occurs in the Inquest Post Mortem of Edmund Crouchback, Earl of Lancaster, to whom was granted all the forfeited estates of the Ferrers, Earls of Derby. This document describes a mansion at this place, and as this is the first intimation we have of its existence, it is probable that it was erected by the Earl for a hunting seat, and named on account of its beautiful situation Beaurespaire or Bellerepaire, now contracted into Belper. A succeeding earl was created Duke of Lancaster, and the manor continued in the possession of that Duchy till alienated in the reign of Charles I. It subsequently passed with Duffield to the Jodrells, and now belongs to Timothy White, Esq.

The town, which is straggling and unattractive, is situated on the eastern bank of the Derwent, seven miles N. from Derby, eight S.W. from Alfreton, and is intersected by the Manchester and Derby branch of the Midland railway. The gritstone, found so plentifully in the neighbourhood, is the principal material of which the dwellings are constructed; and as they are built both on hills and in dales a rather curious scene is presented to the spectator when viewing the town from the old Roman road leading from Farnah Green to Milford. The inhabitants are chiefly employed in the manufacture of cotton and hosiery. The former trade was introduced here by a Mr. Robinson, but the venture did not prove pecuniarily advantageous. A more successful effort was made in 1775. A few years previously, Arkwright, the Preston barber, had completed the model of his spinning frame, but his invention found no favour with the Lancashire operatives, and he took his model to Nottingham, where he made the acquaintance of Messrs. Jedediah Strutt & Need, hosiery manufacturers. Mr. Strutt began life as a farmer at South Normanton, but mechanism, not agriculture, was his genius, and in 1758 he took out patents for his Derby ribbing machine. He saw at once the mechanical value of Arkwright's invention, and Arkwright was taken into partnership. A small mill was erected at Nottingham; in 1771 the larger mill at Cromford was erected, and a few years later they built the magnificent ones at Belper and Milford. In 1780 the partnership was dissolved. Mr. Strutt took over the latter mills, which are still carried on by his descendants, and it is to the energy and enterprise of this family that Belper chiefly owes its prosperity. Like the Arkwrights they accumulated great wealth, and the Right Honourable Edward Strutt, sometime M.P. for Derby, Arundel, and Nottingham, and Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, was raised to the peerage in 1856 as Baron Belper. The hosiery manufacture is also carried on to a considerable extent by Messrs. Brettell & Co., chiefly for the London market. Nail making was once the staple trade of the place, and gave employment to 300 or 400 persons, but since the introduction of machine-made nails this industry has almost discontinued.

In 1855 Smedley Brothers established the Eagle Iron works, where the manufacture of edge runner grinding mills is carried on to a larger extent than at any other works in the United Kingdom. A considerable trade is also done in the manufacture of steam engines, boilers, heavy castings, and all kinds of constructive iron work. Besides doing a large home trade, their manufactures are sent to all parts of the world. The concern has recently been converted into a Limited Company.

A market is held every Saturday, and formerly there were fairs on the 28th January, 12th May, and 31st October; but for many years only the last named one has taken place, and is of considerable importance. The town is lighted with gas works erected by a company of shareholders in 1846 at a cost of £3,500. Water works also were constructed by a company of shareholders. The Urban District Council having recently decided to purchase the entire plant and property from the company for £11,700. Mr. George Henry Strutt, J.P., generously offered to advance the whole purchase money without interest; and dying a few weeks later, he left instructions for the sum of £11,700 to be transferred to the Urban District Council absolutely.

Belper was formerly a chapelry under Duffield, and the original chapel, dedicated to St. John the Baptist, still remains, and is used as a chapel of ease to St. Peter's. It is a plain building of stone 76ft. by 18ft., and consists of a nave and raised chancel under one continuous roof, a south porch, and a bell turret rising from the west gable. There is no record of its foundation, but certain features in the architecture point undoubtedly to the Early English period, circa 1250. The chancel, which is separated from the nave by a wooden screen composed of small arches and columns, is furnished with open seats. Of all the lancet windows with which the church has been lighted throughout, three only remain in their original condition, two on the north side and one on the south, but within the last few years every effort has been made to restore, as far as possible, portions of the remaining windows, with the result that St. John's Chapel does not differ very much in appearance from its early days. The east window is of three lights, the centre one being partly ornamented with coloured glass, and there is also a very pretty stone reredos in five divisions, with the cross and pillars of alabaster, bearing the inscription, "To the glory of God and in memory of John Monk, Q.C. Born at Belper, Dec. 13, 1802. Died in London, Jan. 29, 1874. Erected by his eldest children." In the south wall of the chancel is a double sedilia, and near it an ancient piscina. The old altar still remains, and must be an object of interest to every lover of antiquity. It is a stone slab, three feet six inches, by one foot nine and a half, and in height two feet seven. The roof is ceiled, and connected with the wall by five large tie-beams. The old font stands at the west end. It is an octagonal stone basin, on a shaft of the same shape, the only new part being the supporting columns. An old stone cross stands in the churchyard. On it roughly carved are—W 1634 T.S: I H. T S. R H.: S M. The shaft of this cross formerly served as a lintel over the entrance of the porch, where it was probably placed in 1634, and has been restored to its original position by the present vicar.

St. Peters Church was built in 1822, at a cost of £11,921. It is a handsome stone edifice in the Gothic style of the 14th century, built on an elevation above the town, and comprises nave, chancel, and western tower. Its dimensions are 101 feet by 56 feet, and 30 feet high, and its accommodation 1,600. The stone of which the building is constructed was obtained from Hunger Hill quarry, half-a-mile from Belper. The tower is 100 feet high, and 20 feet square at the base, with strong buttresses at the angles, finished at the top with octagonal pinnacles. The ceiling is panelled, the intersections of the beams and joists being elegantly moulded. The bells (six in number), hung in 1861, cost £334 10s. The present vicar is the Rev. Fdk. Alfred Friend; patron, the Vicar of Duffield; the value of the living being £285. The nave is embattled, and pinnacles adorn the four corners. The chancel is a deep recess, abutting at the east end. The east window is of five lights, tracery headed, filled with stained glass, and to the north of it is a memorial tablet to Jedediah Strutt, Esq., born September 7th, 1785, died November 1st, 1854; and to the south, one to Susannah, wife of J. Strutt, born April 12th, 1792, died January 16th, 1846. The church is furnished with seats of pitchpine. A gallery runs round three sides, and underneath it, on the east wall of the nave, is placed a chaste marble monument to George Brettie, Esq., who died in 1835, and two sons, bearing the figure of a female resting on one knee.

The organ is placed in the west gallery, and the font, which is of stone, octagonal in shape, resting upon a similar base underneath. At the west end of the church are three entrances, one in the centre of the tower, and one on either side, and six perpendicular Gothic windows grace each side wall.

The Vicarage, a plain but substantial residence of stone, standing in its own grounds not far from the church, was built in 1819-20, at a cost of £1,139, defrayed by a grant from Queen Anne's Bounty.

St. Mark's Church, Openwood Gate, was built in 1891 at a cost of £1,236 13s. 9d. It belongs to St. Peter's parish, and is a very neat stone building, accommodating about 300. The chancel, which is furnished with open seats, is separated from the nave by a wooden screen. The east window is of three lights, tracery headed. A pointed brick arch, with folding doors, separates the vestry from the church. The north and south walls are lighted with five and six perpendicular one-light windows, filled with diamond panes of coloured glass. A pretty alabaster font, on a stone base, was the gift of William Marshall, Leicester. At the west end of the church is a bell turret, containing one bell; while the east end is ornamented by a cross.

Christ Church, built by subscription, in 1849, is a substantial stone edifice, accommodating about 600 people. In shape it is oblong, strongly buttressed, with a bell turret at the west end containing three bells, and a porch at the south-west. In 1877 the church was re-furnished and decorated, and the interior now presents a beautiful appearance. The chancel is separated from the nave by an iron screen on a basement of stone. The floor rises one step above that of the nave, and is laid with encaustic tiles of the 14th century. The chancel is furnished with open oak pews, and the organ stands at either corner. The east window, one of three lights, is pointed, and filled with ornamented glass. The nave, which is furnished with pews of pitchpine, is lighted by five pointed one-light windows. The font stands at the west end. It is of Caen stone, in shape circular, and elaborately sculptured. Belonging to this church are public palls, bier, and shrouds, for the use of the parishioners. They are the gift of the Strutt family, as are also the windows, altar, candlesticks, &c. The living is a vicarage, in the gift of George Henry Strutt, Esq., and is at present held by the Rev. Edward Augustus Hillyard, B.A. (Cantab.)

The Vicarage, a substantial stone residence in close proximity to the church, was built in 1857, by subscription.

Congregational Church. This is a handsome Gothic building, in the centre of the town. It was erected in 1872, at a cost of nearly £5,000, and covers part of the ground on which an old chapel stood for many years. It is built of stone, and has a graceful tower and spire, which rise to the height of 120ft. The east window is of three lights, the tracery work being filled with ornamental glass. The chancel arch is lofty and pointed, on either side of which is a window of one light, in the east wall of the nave. The side walls each contain six large, two-light, pointed, tracery-headed windows. The west window is a very large one of four lights. In 1886 the walls were painted and decorated, and the interior now presents a most chaste and beautiful appearance. Several monuments have found place on its walls, and the chancel contains a large and sweet-toned organ, with the inscription: "Presented to the Congregational Church by Ebenezer Smedley, Esq., May 26, 1886."

Baptist Church.—This is a handsome place of worship in the Gothic style of architecture. It is built of brick and stone, the front portion being of rock-faced stone, with dressings from the celebrated Darley Dale quarries. The front, comprising the eastern gable, is flanked by a tower on either side, between which are two porches, an inner and an outer one, the latter being supported by a colonnade of three Gothic arches. The interior of the chapel is airy and lofty, and consists of nave and apsidal chancel. A galley runs round three sides of the nave, of pitchpine with Gothic trefoil panels. The chancel is separated from the nave by three Gothic arches resting on moulded columns with carved capitals. Between the columns are the organ and choir screens, in design similar to the front entrance. At the western end of the chapel are the two vestries and the open baptistry, in shape octagonal, constructed of Hopton stone, the interior being lined with tiles. The east end is lighted by a large double three-light tracery-headed window, filled with stained glass. The chapel is furnished with seats of Gothic design, affording accommodation for about 700. The building was erected in 1893-4, under the superintendence of the architect, S. R. Bakewell, C.E., at a cost of £2,700.

Wesleyan Methodist Church, built in 1807, at a cost of £3,000, is a substantial stone structure, affording accommodation for 600. It has a gallery running round in the shape of a horse shoe. This chapel contains a fine organ, many memorial monuments and tablets, and in its internal arrangements is very comfortable and complete.

Pottery Wesleyan Chapel, built in 1816, is furnished with pitchpine pews, and an organ at the east end. A gallery runs all round, and the chapel has accommodation for 250 worshippers. Primitive Methodist Chapel, Field Head, is a plain stone building, erected in 1817. It has a gallery round three sides, and is furnished with open pews of pitchpine, with a rostrum of similar wood, and contains several mural monuments. The Primitive Methodists have also a chapel at Cow Hill. United Methodist Free Church, or Salem Chapel, is a large rectangular brick building, erected in 1856. The front of this chapel is in two tiers, the upper one containing three semicircular-headed windows, and the lower tier two square ones. A gallery runs round three sides. The interior is furnished with seats of pitchpine, while a rostrum of similar wood stands at the west end. Underneath the chapel are a Sunday schoolroom and class-rooms. There is also a United Methodist Free Church at Barton Hill.

Unitarian Chapel, built in 1788, in Field Row, is a solid stone structure, with a burial ground in front. The chapel contains a gallery, with vaults underneath, in which many members of the Strutt family lie buried. Over the pulpit is a marble monument to Jedediah Strutt, founder of this chapel, who died 1797, aged 70 years; also his brother, William Strutt, aged 70 years. On the west wall is one to John Barber, died October 30th, 1886, and who left a permanent endowment to the chapel. The Sunday School is in Market Street Lane.

The Friends, though not numerous, are influential. There is a plain stone building, in Market Street, accommodating a

The Salvation Army Barracks are situated in King Street the Gaiety Music Hall.

St. Lawrence's Convent, Field Lane. This is a Roman Catholic Protestant Order of St. Lawrence's Sisterhood, established the present convent being built in 1885, at a cost of £12,000, a stone building, under the care of a Mother Superior. It is arranged, and contains several stained-glass windows in the walls, and an organ at the west end.

SCHOOLS.—Belper is amply provided with education. A Board was formed in 1876, and there are five schools, covering various departments, under its management. Long Row, formerly School, belonging to the Messrs. Strutt, was purchased in 1877. There are departments for boys, girls, and infants, having 607 scholars.

High Street Infants', established in 1834, was taken over in 1877, and enlarged in 1893. The board room is here. A large building of brick erected in 1877. There is accommodation for 444 children, and an average attendance of 300. A boys' school was built at The Fleet in 1882. It consists of one large room, having a total accommodation for 164, which is Hill School for girls and infants was erected in 1877. The Infants' School, in 1849, is a commodious building of stone, measuring 90 feet by 40, accommodating 240 scholars.

PUBLIC BUILDINGS.—The Public Hall, situated in King Street, was built in 1882 at a cost of £3,500, by a company formed for the purpose, which contains a good organ, is used for public meetings, &c., and in the small hall petty sessions and council meetings. The Jubilee Hall in New road was built in 1887 by Mrs. Alfred Strutt, at a cost of £500. It is used for public purposes and also for meetings of the Spiritualistic Society. This hall is at present owned by Mrs. Geo. Strutt. The Cottage Hospital, Bridge Foot, supported by Mrs. Geo. Strutt, is a plain stone building, with accommodation for two indoor patients. It consists of Sisters' and servants' rooms, dining hall and kitchen, and a relief either indoor or outdoor to the aged and sick of Belper. The Sister from the Convent. The Conservative Club, Campbell Street, building, erected in 1888, at a cost of about £2,000, on a site given by Mr. Strutt, Esq., and consists of entrance hall, card and game rooms on the ground floor, and upstairs the committee and billiard room, well furnished and lighted. There are also apartments for private hire.

The County Court Office is situated at Field Head, a new structure. The old building formerly used for the same purpose was a warehouse, while the judge's chair has found a place in the new building in Bridge Street.

The Subscription Library, held in the Public Hall, was founded in 1837. In 1837 the "Library of the Old Mechanics' Institute" was transferred to the Subscription Library. The number of books amounts to 1,000. The Subscription Reading Room, also in the Public Hall, was founded in 1882 on its removal from King Street. In its infancy it was a National Schoolroom, in which place it was commenced in 1837 with 100 members. There is also a Reading Room at St. John's, a building, stone-fronted, built by Mrs. Geo. Henry Strutt. The Reading Room is open for working men from September to May, by entertainments and subscriptions. It is also used for mothers' meetings, and Bible classes in connection with Belper Burial Board, formed in 1857, consists of nine members. The Cemetery is situated on the Matlock Road, and was consecrated in 1859. It comprises about fifteen acres, tastefully laid out, and cost £7,500. There are two handsome mortuary chapels, of Gothic design, with tower, surmounted by a spire. The chapels are lighted by tracery-headed windows. The lodge is a substantially-built stone residence, the ground belonging to it being prettily laid out and planted.

The Union Workhouse, Derby Road, is a handsome stone building, erected about 1838. Adjoining the house is a hospital, which was built in 1889, at a cost of over £10,000, containing about 106 beds, the total accommodation being for more than 300. The union embraces 66,511 acres, contains 61,045 inhabitants, and has a total ratable value of £260,719. It includes the following townships:—Alderwasley, Alfreton, Allestree, Ashleyhay, Belper, Crich, Denby, Dethick-Lea and Holloway, Duffield, Hazlewood, Heage, Holbrook, Horsley, Horsley Woodhouse, Idridgehay, Kedleston, Kilbourne, Kirk Langley, Mackworth, Mapperley, Markeaton, Morley, Pentrich, Qardon, Ravensdale Park, Ripley, Shottle, Smalley, South Wingfield, Turnditch, Weston-Underwood, Windley, and Wirksworth.

Belper Lane End, about one mile distant from Belper and five from Wirksworth, is a hamlet pleasantly situated at the junction of the Belper road with the old coach road running between Wirksworth and Derby. It contains many good houses, and a chapel-of-ease to Christ Church, Belper. This chapel, dedicated to St. Faith, was built in 1890, at a cost of £304, and is an oblong stone structure, with entrance at the west end. It was built as a school-chapel, and is lighted by eight pointed windows filled with diamond panes. It contains a pulpit of pitch-pine, a Litany desk of similar wood, oak lectern, and harmonium. The chancel is separated from the nave by a movable wooden screen. In it stands the font, which is of stone, octagonal in shape, while in the north-east corner of the chapel is a banner to St. Faith, virgin and martyr.

There is also a Wesleyan chapel and Sunday school in this hamlet, the former built in 1849 at a cost of £136, the school added in 1878. The chapel is well lighted and furnished, and affords accommodation for 130 worshippers.

The Dalley is another hamlet in the township of Belper, and consists of about ten houses situated on the main road, about a quarter of a mile from Belper Lane End. From here, on the high ground, good views of Crich may be had. The Far Laund is a hamlet on the Belper and Chesterfield roads, about one mile from Belper. It contains three nailers' shops, but that work is now almost extinct. About half-a-mile from here is the Bent, a hamlet on the Belper and Black Horse roads. Shire Oaks is a hamlet situated on the high ground above the Dalley. Sand Bed Lane and Overlane are rows of houses on the outskirts of the parish. White Moor is another hamlet, a short distance from The Pottery.

LOCAL WORTHY.—Samuel Harrison, the tenor singer, was born at Belper on the 8th of September, 1760, and died in London, 1812. For twenty-five years he was the leading tenor singer in the kingdom, and was highly appreciated when he sang before royalty at the palace.

CHARITIES.—John Lockoe, of Holbrooke, in 1676, left 10 acres of land at Kilburn, the rent thereof to be distributed as follows, viz., 40s. yearly to the poor of Belper, 10s. to Kilburn, 20s. to Horsley, and 20s. to Horsley Woodhouse. Belper receives four-ninths of the rent. Henry Smith, of Whitemoor, in 1705, gave all his lands called Cawoods, in Belper, 17½ acres, to which an allotment of between two and three acres of Belper Common was afterwards added, half the rent thereof to be given to the poor of Belper, and the other half to the officiating minister. John Taylor, in 1746, left an acre of land at Milly Laund, in Belper. This land was sold in 1810 to Messrs. Strutt, subject to the payment of 19s. 2d. yearly to the poor. Matthew Smith, in 1713, left about 14 acres of land in the Hoppings for the endowment of two almshouses which he had built. The almshouses were rebuilt by the trustee in 1829. James Sims gave by his will two almshouses and coals. Two houses, supposed to be these, fell into decay, and were claimed and rebuilt by the parish out of the poor rates. The tenants pay rent. John Taylor, in 1714, left the interest of £40 to the poor, but this was lost upwards of a century ago. The sum of £5 10s. is received from the Rev. Francis Gisborne's charity by the minister, and expended in flannel and coarse cloth for the poor. John Slater, of Belper, in 1742, left £40 to the poor, the interest to be distributed every 2nd February.

BLACKWELL.

This is an ancient parish and township containing 1,739 acres of land lying on the border of Nottinghamshire. The total ratable value is £12,660, and the population in 1891 was 3,140. The parish is in the hundred of Scarsdale; electoral division of Blackwell; petty sessional division, county court district, and rural deanery of Alfreton; and poor law union of Mansfield. The Duke of Devonshire and the Earl of Carnarvon are joint lords of the manor and principal landowners.

The manor has been held in moieties from an early period. In the reign of Richard I. these moieties were in the possession of the Langfords and the Sacheverells, and were subsequently held by several noble families. In the 15th century these two divisions of the manor were known as Sulney and Trussebut. In 1445, Sir William Babington died, seized of one-half of the former and the whole of the latter. The Longfords retained their moiety till the reign of Henry VIII., when it passed to William Holles. In 1590, Sir William Holles died, seized of it; and in 1710, Gilbert Holles, Earl of Clare, and Sir John Molyneux, of Teversall, Bart., were joint lords. The estate of the former passed to the Duke of Newcastle, from whose trustees it was purchased in 1742 by the Duke of Devonshire. The other moiety passed by the marriage of Henrietta Anna, eldest daughter of Lord Henry Thomas Molyneux Howard, to the Earl of Carnarvon.

The surface of the parish is gently undulated, and the soil various, loamy in some places and clayey in others. Coal has been worked to a considerable extent in late years, and many clusters of houses have been erected to accommodate the increased population. There are three collieries in operation within the parish; two belonging to the Diminsdale Colliery Company, who employ about 210; and the third, called the "A Winning," to the Blackwell Colliery Company, Limited. This pit was commenced in 1871, and gives employment to about 1,100 men and boys. The parish is intersected by the Midland, and Manchester, Sheffield, and Lincolnshire railways.

The village is pleasantly situated upon elevated ground, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles N.E. from Alfreton, seven miles S.W. from Mansfield, and $1\frac{1}{2}$ miles from Westhouses station on the Midland railway. The church, dedicated to St. Werburgh, is supposed to be the fourth edifice that has occupied the same site. There are strong reasons for believing that a church stood here before the Norman Conquest. St. Werburgh was a Saxon saint, abbess of the convent of Ely, and died in 699. The Normans, from motives of policy, ignored the Saxon saints in the dedication of the churches they erected. There is also corroborative evidence of its Saxon origin in the fragment of a cross that remains in the churchyard. Two sides of it are ornamented with interlacing knot-work, and the other two with circular braids, a species of ornamentation that is usually regarded as a characteristic of Saxon work. The church was rebuilt in the Norman era; and that edifice stood till 1824, when, having become thoroughly dilapidated and dangerous, it was taken down and a new church erected on the site, at an estimated cost of £1,050. In 1877, the church was again rebuilt, with the exception of the tower, at a cost of about £3,000, which was raised by subscription. The plan comprises chancel (with north chapel or transept), nave, south porch, and a lofty western tower containing three bells. When the church was reconstructed in 1824, some of the old Norman pillars were re-used, and one of these has been rebuilt in the north wall of the present nave. The chancel arch is lofty and pointed, and is crossed by an iron screen on a stone base. The east window is of three lights, and is filled with stained glass representing nine scenes in the life of Our Lord. The nave is lighted by windows of the same character, three on each side. There are no ancient monuments. The church of Blackwell was given by William Fitz-Ranulph to the Priory of Thurgarton early in the reign of Henry II., and the advowson and tithes remained with the priory till the dissolution of monasteries. The living is a vicarage, valued in the King's Book at £5 4s. 2d., now worth £980 yearly, and held by the Rev. E. E. Morris, M.A. The Duke of Devonshire is patron and impropiator. The Vicarage is a commodious residence, erected by the late Duke of Devonshire in 1891, at a cost of £2,500.

The school was endowed in 1835, by the lords of the manor, with £20 per annum. The present premises, a block of handsome brick buildings with stone dressings, were erected in 1872, and enlarged in 1884, and again in 1887. There is accommodation for 220 children, and an average attendance of 162.

Hillcote is a long scattered village, a quarter of a mile south of Blackwell. The estate belongs to John Slater Wilkinson, Esq., whose ancestors have held it since the beginning of the 18th century.

Newton is a small village half-a-mile north of Blackwell, and like that place remains purely agricultural. There is a station near on the Midland railway called Newton and Tibshelf. Newton Hall, now a farmhouse, has, in spite of a little modernising in two or three windows, a venerable old-world appearance. Near it are the ruins of a chapel built in 1696. In the outer yard of the hall are three incised slabs covering the graves of William Downing, who died in 1857, and his two wives. Mr. Downing was the owner of the hall and estate, and used to preach in the chapel. The property now belongs to Messrs. Adlington, of Newton Hall, Skegley. The village generally wears an antiquated aspect. In a house here, now in a ruinous tumble-down condition, Jedediah Strutt, the eminent mechanician and inventor, lived at the time of his marriage, in 1755. Adjoining Newton is a large colliery village called Newton Green. There are a few framework knitters here, and the Primitive Methodists have a chapel, built in 1880 at a cost of £350, and enlarged in 1889 at a further outlay of £188. Primrose Hill is a colliery village, about one mile from Westhouses station. The Blackwell Colliery Co. erected schools here, with residence for the teachers, in 1876, at a cost of £2,600. There are two departments, with an aggregate average attendance of 370. A Hospital was built by the Company in 1881, at a cost of £1,000. It comprises several lofty and well-arranged rooms, a dispensary nurse's apartment, and rooms for the resident surgeon. An Institute was erected in 1878 for the benefit of the workmen. The building contains billiard-room, reading-room, a large room for meetings, and caretaker's apartments. Provision has also been made for the spiritual welfare of the inhabitants. A Wesleyan Chapel was erected in 1875, at a cost of £1,823, and a residence for the minister was added in 1880, at an outlay of £870, including the furniture. The chapel is a handsome building of brick, with stone dressings, in the Gothic style. The interior is neatly furnished with open benches of pitchpine, and contains a good organ, purchased in 1887 for £160. Berrister is a colliery village of a very superior kind. The houses are built in pairs in the villa style, and the place altogether presents the appearance of respectability. There is an Institute, erected by the Blackwell Colliery Co. in 1892, at a cost of £500, and also a Wesleyan Chapel. Adjoining the chapel is an Infant School, supported by the Colliery Company. Scanderland, an ancient farmhouse in the parish, was the ancestral home of the Sampsons. Westhouses is a small village and station on the Midland railway, about 1½ miles from Alfreton. It is chiefly inhabited by employes of the Railway Company, who have erected an Institute and Mission Room for the benefit of their workmen. The village has sprung into existence during the past eight years, and is named from the adjoining farmhouse. In the garden of this house stands a Norman font, which was brought from the residence of the parish clerk at Tibshelf in 1880, where it had been used as a pig trough.

BRACKENFIELD.

Brackenfield is a parish and township in the hundred of Scarsdale; petty sessional division, county court district, and deanery of Alfreton; and the union and rural district of Chesterfield. Its area is 1,557 acres; ratable value, £2,533; and number of inhabitants, 346. W. G. Turbutt, Esq., is the principal landowner, and lord of the manor. In the reign of King John the manors of Brackenfield, or Brackenthwaite, as it was then called, and Ogston were held by a family named Heriz, with whom Brackenfield remained till the time of Edward III. It then passed to the Willoughbys, who held it for many generations. In 1369 Sir Richard Willoughby, a justice of the Common Pleas, held Brackenfield under the Deincourts. About the same time Ogston became the property and seat of the Revels, with whom it remained till the commencement of the last century, when it passed by marriage into the family of Turbutt, who now own both manors.

The village of Brackenfield is situated $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles N.W. from Alfreton, seven from Chesterfield, 18 from Derby, and three from Wingfield station, on the Derby and Chesterfield branch of the Midland railway. A short distance from the village is the Old Chapel, or Trinity Chapel, which until little more than a century ago was simply a chapel-of-ease, in which service was held four or five times in the year by the vicar of Morton. By an order in Council in 1844, Brackenfield was made a distinct parish, and in 1856 a new church, with the same dedication, was erected on a more convenient site. The old chapel, now in a very dilapidated condition, is a plain building with stone roof. From the west gable rises a small turret for two bells, and the east gable is surmounted by a cross. The church is a handsome edifice of cut stone, consisting of chancel, nave, mortuary chapel on the north side, aisle, porch, and tower. The latter is surmounted by an octagonal spire, built by the late Mr. Turbutt, of Ogston Hall. The east window is of three lights, in which are represented the Crucifixion, with the Magi worshipping the infant Christ on the one side and Mary Magdalene on the other. In the tracery is depicted the Ascension. There is a very fine double three-light window, with traceried head, in the north wall. The mortuary chapel is separated from the chancel by a stone screen with an iron gate, bearing the text, "The dead in Christ shall rise." The roof is of oak, and the floor is laid with encaustic tiles. The interior is lighted by a three-light window with traceried head. The nave is furnished with open seats of pitchpine, stone pulpit, and oaken lectern. There are two two-light windows in the south wall, one of which is filled with stained glass, painted by the late Mrs. Turbutt, of Ogston Hall; and there are two single-lights in the west wall, each filled with stained glass. Against this wall has been placed the old oak chancel screen from Trinity Chapel, and there are also two oak seats of ancient date, ornamented with coats of arms carved in relief. The aisle is separated from the nave by three pointed arches resting upon octagonal columns, and is seated with pitchpine benches. The tower contains three bells. There is a tradition in the neighbourhood that the two bells of the old chapel were stolen by Oliver Cromwell. The church will accommodate 230, and all the seats are free. The living is a vicarage, worth £85 per annum (together with the public-house called the Parson's Arms), in the gift of W. G. Turbutt, Esq., J.P., and held by the Rev. C. H. Leacroft, M.A. The vicarage is a substantial residence, situated near the church, built in 1864 at a cost of about £1,200.

The National School was established about 50 years ago, and enlarged in 1890 at the expense of Mr. Turbutt. There is accommodation for 118 children, and an average attendance of 80. Adjoining the school is the teacher's residence.

Woolley is a hamlet in this parish, consisting of a few farms, on one of which is a shaking bog about an acre in extent, with a depth of 12 feet. Potatoes have been grown on it weighing 17 ounces each. Off the road leading to Woolley Moor is a good gritstone quarry, opened about five years ago.

Ogston Hall, long the residence of the Revels, and now the seat and property of W. G. Turbutt, Esq., J.P., stands in a small park, about one mile and a half east of Trinity Chapel.

CRICH.

This is a parish and township in the hundred of Morleston and Litchurch; electoral division of Crich; petty sessional division and poor law union of Belper; county court district and rural deanery of Alfreton. It embraces an area of 3,667 acres, and is valued for rating purposes at £14,073. The population in 1891 was 3,070. A. F. Hurt, Esq., J.P., C.C., Alderwasley Hall, is lord of the manor and one of the principal landowners. The others are W. S. Nightingale, Esq., Miss Hurt, the Clay Cross and Butterley Companies; G. B. Hughes, and H. B. Boag, Esqrs. There are also several small freeholders. The surface is picturequely diversified by lofty hills and deep valleys. The soil is various and rests on clay and gritstone. Veins of lead occur amongst the hills, and for some years the mines of Crich Cliff were the most productive in the county. Limestone is abundant and extensively quarried by the Clay Cross and Butterley Companies; there is also a good gritstone quarry worked by Mr. John Haynes. In July, 1882, a landslip occurred at the quarries of the former company, whereby Cliff House, three cottages, and about 10 acres of land were destroyed.

The manor of Crich was held at the time of the Domesday Survey by Ralph Fitzhubert, to whom it was granted by the Conqueror, together with its lead mine, which had previously belonged to Leuric and Levenot. To him succeeded his son Ralph Fitzralph, the first Baron of Crich, who gave the church of Crich to Darley Abbey. The family had their principal family residence here, and Hubert Fitzralph obtained a grant of free chase and permission to have hounds and deer of his own. He died about 1225, leaving two daughters coheirresses, one of whom, Juliana, married Anker de Frecheville, whose son, Ralph de Frecheville, succeeded to the barony of Crich. Ralph de Frecheville, in 1324, alienated the manor to Roger Beler and his heirs. It subsequently passed by the marriage of a coheiress to Sir Roger de Swillington, and from this family it descended to Ralph, Lord Cromwell, who, in the reign of Henry VI., sold the reversion to John Talbot, Earl of Shrewsbury. On the death of Gilbert the 7th Earl in 1616, the manor was divided between his three daughters and coheiresses, the Countesses of Pembroke, Kent, and Arundel. The manor has since become very much divided and now belongs to A. F. Hurt, Esq., and several others, who are the owners of the mineral duties.

The village of Crich, which is of considerable extent, occupies a lofty position on the slope of an isolated cliff, 12 miles N. from Derby, 5 N. from Belper, 5 S. from Matlock, and 1 from Whatstandwell station on the Midland railway. This cliff apart from its rich veins of ore, is to geologists one of the most interesting spots in the country. Dr. Mantell in his "Wonders of Geology" says:—"There is one spot which is perhaps not equalled in England for the lesson it teaches of some of the ancient revolutions of the globe. This is called Crich Hill, about five miles east of Matlock. Even from a distance you see there is something extraordinary concealed in that mountain range from its mere outline. This hill consists of strata of limestone like the rocks of Dovedale and Matlock which have been forced up into a dome, through overlying strata of quite a different character, and much less ancient. These new rocks are called 'millstone grit,' and once, of course, were horizontal and deposited on the limestone. A geologist will have no hesitation in assigning this upheaval to volcanic action, but fortunately we are not left to supposition. The proof remains! The very melted lava, the eruption and expansion of which occasioned the elevation at the highest point, and forced its way through an overlying strata, occupies the heart of the mountain, in the centre of which it has been found." This hill is crowned by a round tower of cut stone, built by "F. H. (Francis Hurt), 1788," and rebuilt in 1851. A spiral staircase of 51 stone steps leads to the top, round which is a parapet. This tower, designated Crich Stand, is, according to the Ordnance Survey, 955 feet above the mean level of the sea, and commands an extensive and charming view of the surrounding country. On a clear day with the aid of a telescope Lincoln Cathedral may be seen. Another eminence called The Tors presents a face of solid rock overlooking the village and plain below.

The village wears the appearance of antiquity, many of the houses bearing 17th century dates, and was of sufficient importance in those days to have a market of its own, though there is no record of its grant. An antiquated fountain stands in the centre of the spacious Market Place, and a little distance off, at the junction of the Cromford, Alfreton, and Derby Roads, an imposing wayside cross was erected by public subscription in 1871, on the site, and as far as possible, with the materials of an old cross of unknown date, but supposed to have been Saxon. On one side of the circular head is a pretty floral design in high relief, and on the other is a representation of St. Michael vanquishing the serpent. The cross was designed by Mr. Thomas Harris, architect, London, and the work was executed by Mr. Isaac Petts, of Crich. The market was long obsolete, but for some years one has been held every Friday night. Fairs are held on the 6th of April and 11th of October. On the latter, old Michaelmas day, the feast is also held.

The church is a handsome edifice of stone, situated at "the top of the town." It is chiefly in the Decorated style of the 14th century, but there are considerable remains of an earlier church, and comprises chancel, with north vestry, nave, with north and south aisle, south porch, and western tower, with octagonal spire, containing a peal of five bells. Above these is another called the "Parson's bell," which was, doubtless, the old Sanctus bell, the turret for which still graces the eastern gable of the nave. The arcade of each aisle consists of three semi-circular or Norman arches, and a narrow pointed one adjoining the chancel, indicating an extension of the nave when the chancel was rebuilt. The pillars on both sides are circular, but those of the north aisle have massive square capitals, whilst those on the south aisle have rounded ones. The chancel is spacious and lighted by a handsome east window of five lights, representing Christ and the four Evangelists, and two on the south side. It is separated from the nave by a lofty-pointed arch. The incised memorial slabs that form the floor tell of the many persons there interred. In the south wall are three sedilia under trefoiled arches; and on the opposite side is an almy or cupboard closed by a carved oak door, but the slanting internal recess shows that it was originally a hagioscope or "squint." Above this, projecting out of the wall, is a stone reading desk with ledge to hold the book. There was formerly a chapel at the east end of the south aisle, the piscina of which remains, and there are indications of another chapel against the north aisle. The font is a massive piece of Norman work, lined with lead, and ornamented with a moulding of cable pattern and a chevron. The parapets of the aisles are plain, those of the nave are embattled, and the roofs are flat.

The monuments are numerous and interesting, but space permits us to particularise only a few. Under an ogee arched recess in the north aisle is the recumbent effigy of a man in a long gown, bareheaded, hands joined over the breast, and feet resting on a dog. It is said to be that of Sir William de Wakebridge, who founded two chantries in this church. In the exterior wall is another canopied recess, similar to the above, without any effigy. On the north wall of the chancel is the upper slab of a tomb bearing incised figures of a man and woman dressed in the costume of the 16th century, and wearing muffs. In the two upper corners are two shields of arms. It once covered the tomb of German Poole, lord of Wakebridge, who died in 1588, but the Latin inscription is almost effaced. Under this is a table tomb of alabaster, on which are incised the figures of a man and wife, and the following mutilated inscription, which, when perfect, was as follows:—

"Here lieth John Claye, gentleman, and Mary wnom he first did wive;
With her hee lived eight years space, in which God gave them children five.
Daughter to William Calton, Esquir., who was unto that kinge of fame
Henrie the eight chief cock-matcher and servante of his hawkes by name.
And shee had a former match, Charnolles, of Swarkstone, in Lestershire;
So shee deceast, this Claye did take the widow of German Poole, Esquire, Daughter of Edward, who was sonne to Sir John Ferrers, of Tamworth, Knight:
She lyes entombed in this church with him to whom she first was plight.
And now this Claye is closed in claye, the fairest flesh doth fade like grass;
Hee had one sister who unto Stuffyn, of Shirbrook, married was.
For Deathe doth give an end to all, and now this Claye shall rest herein:
All Claye to claye shall come at last, by Death the due reward of synne.
Thou deathe, his deathe, thy deathe is hee whose soule doth live with Criste for aye:
The stinge of death can no one flee; the greatest monarchs are but claye."

There are also inscriptions in Latin, setting forth that the said John Claye died in 1632 and Mary in 1583. The following undated epitaph also appears on the same wall:—

"Soules they are made of heavenly spirit,
From whence they come yee heavens inherite.
Didst know that bodyes made of claye
Deathe will devoure by night or daye.
Yett is hee as hee was I say,
He livinge and dead remayneth Claye;
His verye name that nature gave
Is now as shall be in his grave.
Tymes doth teach, experience tryes
That claye to duste the wind up dryes:
Then this a wonder coumpt wee must,
That want of winde should make Claye dust."

In another corner of the chancel is an altar tomb of alabaster, on which is incised the figure of a man in plate armour. Round the margin is a Latin inscription to Godfrey Beresford, servant to the most honourable George, Earl of Shrewsbury, and son and heir to Aden Beresford, of Fenny Bentley, who died in 1513. Above the sedilia is a brass encased in marble to the memory of Christopher Blencowe Noble Dunn, M.R.C.S., E., who died in 1892, and was for 30 years medical officer of this district. He was an enthusiastic antiquary, and also wrote several short poems, which, but for an unforeseen accident, would have been published under the title of "In Wood and Meadow." Another quaint brass to the infant son of Thomas Shelmerdine, who held this living during the Commonwealth, bears the following inscription:—

"Noe sooner bloomed, but blasted,
Yet to revive with thine
At the refreshing.—Ephraim Shelmerdine. March 1st, 1637."

There are eight old funeral brasses on the walls of the belfry, which were formerly in other parts of the church. A thorough restoration of the church was carried out in 1860, at a cost of £1,800. The churchyard was also enlarged at the same time. Here is the headstone of George Walker, who died in 1849, in his 101st year. Two other centenarians are also buried here.

The original dedication of the church was to St. Mary. It is mentioned by that name in various ancient chartularies, and also in the county histories of Pilkington, Davies, and Glover, but in modern directories and also in the Diocesan Calendar it is styled St. Michael's. The change is supposed to have taken place about the time of the Reformation, but there is no clear record.

The living is a vicarage, entered in the Valor Ecclesiasticus of Henry VIII. as of the clear value of £6 10s. 10d., and now worth £230, in the gift of five trustees, and held by the Rev. W. Acraman since 1875. The tithe rent-charge, present value £36, belongs to the living of Wessington, to which it was given by the late Sir Robert Wilmott. The vicarial tithes amount to £30. The living was augmented with £200 benefactions and £200 Queen Anne's Bounty, laid out in the purchase of a farm at Plaistow Green, and with £600 Parliamentary grant.

There is ample provision for the spiritual wants of the inhabitants, for, besides the Parish Church, which will seat 500, there are several Dissenting chapels. The present Baptist Chapel, erected in 1877, at a cost of £1,600, to supersede one built in 1839, is a spacious building of cut stone, with some pretensions to architectural display. The style is an imitation of the Norman. Above the cornice is a gablet, containing a chiming clock and bell. The interior is very ornate. On the east wall are several handsome memorial tablets by Messrs. Petts. The Wesleyan Methodists have a chapel at Crich Common. There is no record of its erection, but the Rev. John Wesley is said to have preached in it. On the wall over the pulpit is a marble monument to John Storer, who died in 1891, at the age of 80. At the age of 13 he lost his sight through an explosion of gunpowder. His father was a class leader in connection with the Primitive Methodists; but John, when 26 years old, left the Primitives and joined the Wesleyan Methodists, of which body he afterwards became a preacher. For some years he resided at Alderwasley, but in 1856 he returned to his native village, and in the pulpit beneath his monument he poured forth his exhortations in rough but soul-stirring eloquence. The United Methodists and the Primitive Methodists have also chapels in the village; the former was erected in 1864, and the latter in 1853.

The village possesses both a parochial and a British school. The former was built in 1848, and enlarged by the addition of an infants' room in 1884; total accommodation, 120 in the senior department, and 50 in the infants. The British School is a handsome block of stone buildings, erected in 1884, at a cost of £1,500, and comprises two departments, mixed and infants; total accommodation, 260; average attendance (mixed), 150; infants, 40. A Reading Room was erected by public subscription in 1889, at a cost of £350. On the ground floor is a spacious billiard room, and above a bagatelle room and a reading room. There are several Friendly Societies in the village. The Independent Friendly Society, established in 1794, holds its meetings in a clubroom, built in 1835; the Oddfellows meet at the British School, and the others at various inns.

There are several genteel residences in and on the outskirts of the village. Chase Cliff, the property and residence of Miss Hurt, is a handsome house, built in 1859, from the designs of Benjamin Terry, Esq., architect, of London. It is in the old style of architecture, with stone mullioned windows beautiful sylvan scenery, and commands from its elevated views. Others are mentioned by name in the directory.

Ambergate is a prosperous and pleasant village partly in this parish. Here are the limekilns, twenty in number, where about thirty hands are constantly employed. The quarry is distant. The stone is brought part of the way by a local road, and down a very steep tram line by a wire rope worked by steam, which were started by the celebrated George Stephenson. Bull Bridge is a village on the bank of the river Amber, $1\frac{1}{4}$ miles S.E. from Ambergate, where are limekilns belonging to the Butterley Company, and the works of Edward Watkins & Co., removed from Fritchley to Ambergate, Crich, Bull Bridge, and Fritchley Gas Light & Coke works here. The Cromford canal passes the village. Wharfedale now form one village, delightfully situated amidst beech woods. There is a station here on the Midland railway, and the place is visited by visitors and tourists. Stone of excellent quality for building, girder beds, caps, coping, and other purposes is extensively quarried in the dressed and rough state. Norway receives grindstone from here, and the stone is also sent to India and America. There are many limekilns in number, have been worked by the Sims family for upwards of a century. Sawing and moulding mills of Mr. Thomas Stone are also on the bank of the Derwent. The Primitive Methodist Chapel, situated at Crich Carr is a handsome edifice of cut stone, erected in 1841 at a cost of £1,000. The site was given by the late Mr. John Sims of the stone. The United Methodists have likewise a chapel here, and also a good National School, erected in 1884, and enlarged in 1891. Standwell Coffee and Reading Rooms were established in 1884, and the business was taken over by Mr. Peacock. Members of the Society towards the reading-room, and 9d. per quarter towards the library, which is a lending library of about 1,000 volumes, many of which are by Miss Florence Nightingale. On the road to Crich is a very fine waterfall, which gushes out of the rock with great force.

Fritchley is pleasantly situated in a valley about one mile from Ambergate, and is said to have received its name from an early proprietor who still owns land and resides here. A bobbin factory was established here about a century ago, by the brothers Wightman; it afterwards passed into the hands of Mr. Sargent. Subsequently it was carried on by Mr. Sargent until 1885, when the building was destroyed by a fire, and the site was sold to Bull Bridge. The village contains many very good houses, and has a highly respectable appearance. Seen from the higher ground, it presents a pleasing picture. Ample provision has been made for the education of the inhabitants. Church service is held in the Memorial Church, built by Elizabeth Hurt, in 1869; the Primitive Methodists rebuilt their chapel in 1841, and the Congregationalists have also a neat edifice of date 1841. The Society of Friends is comparatively strong here, and their meeting-house is a very plain structure converted out of two cottages, where they regularly meet. Matilda Rickman, who died in 1881, left a bequest for the purpose, and they have now an excellent school. The school, I believe, is the only one in the kingdom that strictly adheres to the simplicity and decorum of the original tenets.

The Bowmers have been settled here upwards of 200 years. The door of an outbuilding at Barn Close are the initials I.L.B. and the date 1671; on another stone is L.M.B., 1669.

About three-quarters of a mile distant are two rows of cottages called Hat Factory. Here the Butterley Co. have extensive works. Morewood Moor is a hamlet partly in this parish and partly in the parish of St. Andrew.

The Manor House is an interesting relic of bygone days, and the interior still bears traces of its former beauty. There was formerly a brownware pottery here.

Wakebridge is a hamlet and separate manor about one mile N.N.W. of Crich. It belonged at an early period to a family who took their name from the place, and were allied by marriage with the Fitzralphs, lords of Crich. Sir William de Wakeburge, or Wakebridge, was knight of this shire, and also of Nottingham in several Parliaments. In 1350 he founded and endowed a chantry in the parish church "for God's service and maintaining of poor folk." It was dedicated to St. Nicholas and St. Catherine, and was in the north aisle. The chaplain was bound to distribute amongst the poor, yearly, 10s. in pennies—no small sum when a cow could be purchased for 1s. and a heifer for 6d. The clear income of the chantry was £13 4s. 4d. Eighteen years later he founded another chantry at the altar of St. Mary in the same church, and endowed it with rents of the annual value of £6. Sir William also built a chapel at his mansion house at Wakebridge, and garnished it with an "orgayne and other costly devises." The foundation stones of this chapel may be seen in the bull croft of the present farmhouse, and the door of the cheese room, a beautiful piece of oak work and of undoubted antiquity, probably once belonged to it. Sir William died without issue, and his sister, wife of Sir John de la Pole, inherited his estates. Wakebridge remained in the possession of this family till the death of John Pole, Esq., in 1724, when it passed to his great nephew, Garalt Morphy, whose brother, Edward, sold it, in 1771, to Peter Nightingale, Esq., of Lea, and it is now the property of Mr. W. S. Nightingale. There is a lead mine here on the Lea Hurst estate.

Wheatcroft is a hamlet about two miles N.W. of Crich. The family of Kirkland was formerly settled here, and their initials, with the date 1648, still remain over the door. John Kirkland, who died in 1652, willed his lands in Wheatcroft and elsewhere to Godfrey Clarke, of Somersall, his nearest kinsman, reserving a rent-charge of 40s. out of his farm at Wheatcroft to the poor of Crich. On his funeral brass in the parish church it is said that his "ansers (ancestors) and hee lived at Weatcrost above five hundred years." The United Methodists have a chapel here.

Thurlow Booth, Park Head, Plaistow Green, and Robin Hood are hamlets in the parish.

DUFFIELD.

Duffield is an extensive parish, containing the townships of Duffield, Belper, Hazelwood, Heage, Holbrooke, Shottle and Postern, Turnditch, and Windley, having a total area of 16,564 acres. Belper, Hazelwood, Heage, Holbrooke, and Turnditch, formerly chapelries, are now, for all ecclesiastical purposes, separate parishes, and are given under their respective headings. The township of Duffield embraces 3,421 acres, its ratable value is £19,997, and the population in 1891 was 2,704. It is intersected by the Midland railway, and the branch to Wirksworth also converges here. The parish lies on both sides of the Derwent river, from which the land rises in gentle undulations, crested with thriving plantations. The soil is various, but chiefly red and blue clay, and almost the entire area is laid down in pasture. Major Timothy White is lord of the manor, and the following are the principal landowners:—The Exors. of George Henry Strutt, Esq., Belper; George Herbert Strutt, Esq., Makeney House; Lord Scarsdale, Kedleston Hall; William Gisborne, Esq., Allestree Hall; Major Holmes, Makeney Lodge; I. N. Woodiwiss, Esq., Duffield; The Hon. Frederick Standish O'Grady, The Park, Duffield; Major John Henry Balguy, and Rowland Smith, Esq., Duffield Hall. Duffield is in the hundred of Appletree, the poor law union, county court district, and petty sessional division of Belper, and is the head of an electoral division and rural deanery.

The earliest notice of Duffield occurs in Domesday Book, wherein it is stated that the manor, which had belonged to Siward in the reign of Edward the Confessor, was then held by Henry de Ferrers, and had a church, priest, and two mills. What little is known of its previous history has been revealed to us by the bones, fragments of pottery, and other relics unearthed by the spade of the antiquary. On the eminence where had stood the stockaded homestead of the Saxon lord of Duffield, Henry de Ferrers erected a castle, whence he could overawe the discontented English. This fortress remained protecting the village that lay at its foot till the reign of Henry III., when, in consequence of the rebellion of Robert de Ferrers, it was entirely destroyed by the Royal forces. Every visible trace of the huge structure had disappeared before the middle of last century, and its exact site was a matter of conjecture until 1886, when, through the exertions of Mr. William Bland, excavations were undertaken on the Castle Hill, and the foundations of the Norman keep were discovered beneath the green sward. This, usually the most imposing part of a Norman fortress, was rectangular in form, measuring nearly 100 feet square, and its concrete walls were about 15 feet thick. The well that supplied the castle with water was also discovered, and in it were found several moulded stones, charred pieces of oak, fragments of ancient earthenware, and the original well bucket, scorched and broken. Everywhere were evidences of the fire by which the massive building had been destroyed. During the excavations there were found many traces of the earlier occupation of the mound by the Saxons, Romans, and Ancient Britons. Several stone scrapers, or knives, belonging to the latter-named people were turned up, and the fragments of Roman pottery numbered upwards of 500.

Robert de Ferrers, by his rebellion, lost not only his castle but also his vast estates, which were bestowed by Henry III. on his son, Prince Edmund, afterwards Earl of Lancaster, and thus they became parcel of the Duchy of Lancaster. The manor of Duffield remained in royal hands till granted by Charles I. to Ditchfield and others. It subsequently came to the Jodrells, who were seated here from the middle of the 17th century.

Included in the manor, or connected with it was a tract of land, 30 miles in circuit, known as Duffield Forest and Chase or Duffield Frith, which was under the care of a chief forester or ranger. William Lord Hastings held this office in the reign of Edward V.; and Sir Roger Mynor, who died in 1536, and was buried in Duffield Church, was for some time keeper of the forest. The tenants had certain specified common rights in the Frith: they could gather wood for fuel, pasture their cattle, and turn in a limited number of swine at acorn time. Charles I. attempted to abolish these privileges, by enclosing the forest, but the enclosures were broken down by concerted action, and the cattle turned in as before. An action at law followed, in which it was decided that the king should have one-third, and the remainder of the forest should be conveyed to trustees for the benefit of the commoners. This portion was enclosed and divided under powers of an Act of Parliament obtained in 1785.

The village occupies a delightful situation on the west bank of the Derwent, which here receives the waters of the Ecclesburne brook, and is now attracting notice as a very desirable residential place. There are many good houses in the village, and the sides of the surrounding hills are studded with handsome modern villas. It is within easy access of Derby, being $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles N., and close to the railway station. The church is a substantial edifice of stone, chiefly in the Perpendicular Gothic style, and consists of chancel with an aisle or chapel on the north side, called the "Vicar's Chancel," and a modern vestry, nave, north aisle with transept, south aisle, south porch—now used as a lumber room—and west tower surmounted by a spire. The principal entrance is through the lower storey of the tower. The original dedication was to St. Alkmund, but for some unaccountable reason it has in very recent years been changed to All Saints'. The surroundings of the church are picturesque, but in consequence of its proximity to the river and low situation, it was in former times frequently inundated by floods in wet seasons. The chancel is separated from its side chapel and the nave by pointed arches, and is lighted at the east end by a very fine window of five lights with Perpendicular tracery in the head, but so obtusely pointed that it appears semi-circular. The windows on the south side are square and of two lights, and under the centre one is a priest's door. In the north wall is a sepulchral recess, over which is an ogee-shaped arch surmounted by a handsome finial. Within is a stone coffin, which probably contained the body of the founder of the church in Norman times. The lid is modern, but bears a pretty cross carved in relief in imitation of the original. In the same wall is a hagiocope of very unusual design. It is 36 inches wide by 18 high, and is divided into three openings by two slender mullions. In the south wall of the side chapel is a row of corbel stones, 12 in number, carved into grotesque heads, many of them being still in good preservation. The nave is separated from the aisles on each side by three arches; those on the south side are pointed, and those on the north circular. The latter have evidently been rebuilt during some modern restoration on the octagonal piers of the former pointed ones. The tower is surmounted by a battlemented parapet, within which rises a well-proportioned octagonal spire. The tower contains a peal of ten bells, eight of which were cast by Taylor, of Loughborough, in 1884; and two were added in 1887. There are several ancient and interesting monuments in the church. In a corner of the chancel aisle, probably once the Ladye Chapel, stands a very fine altar tomb of alabaster bearing on the top the recumbent effigies of a knight and his lady. The former is clad in a complete suit of plate armour; his uncovered head rests upon a crested helmet, and around his neck is the collar of S.S. The lady is clothed in a gown and wide sleeved mantle, and wears the angular head-dress of the period. Around the neck is a broad collar, from which hangs a slender chain carrying a small four-pointed cross. The knight's feet rest on a lion, and at each side of the lady's feet is a small dog. The front of the monument has been adorned with figures of bearded friars, but two only remain perfect; and at the end are three angels holding shields. The inscription, with the exception of the date and the last four words, is gone; but on a tablet above the monument is inscribed: "Anno Dom., 1732. This decayed monument, sacred to the memory of Sir Roger Mynors, of Windley Hill, and his lady, who were interred here, Anno Dom. 1536, was repaired by a private friend out of his regard to the worthy family of R. Mynors, of Triagoe, in Herefordshire, Esq." Another monument deserving notice is that of Anthony Bradshaw, of Makeny, and his two wives and twenty children. He erected the monument in 1600, and died 14 years afterwards, other three children having been born to him in the interval. The half-length figures of himself, his two wives, and the twenty children, distinguished by their respective initials, are incised on the monument; and from the long Latin inscription, apparently from his own pen, we learn that he was the fourth son of William Bradshaw, of Bradshaw, in this county; that he was of the Inner Temple, London; Attorney at the Bench, Westminster; late Coroner and Undersheriff of Derbyshire, and Steward of the manor of Duffield; and that he had founded an almshouse for four poor persons at Duffield. Under the inscription is the following acrostic:—

"A s God dyd give this man,	B less them oh Lord with peace,
N o small charge as you see,	R esist there adverse fates,
T o trayne them he began,	A lways them well increase
H ere each in there degree,	D efendyng them from bates,
O ft wishing them such grace,	S uch lyvelihode to them gyve
N o future course to take	H ere whylest on earth they bee,
I njurious to there race,	A s they may love and lyve,
E ls end of lief to make.	W e pray O God quoth He."

On the chancel walls are monuments and tablets to other members of the same family, and also to the Giffords, Balguys, Bonells, Wilmots, &c. The church was renovated and reseated, and south aisle restored, in 1847, the latter at the expense of the Misses Colville. The registers date from 1598.

The living is a vicarage, valued in the King's Book at £8 4s. 0d., now worth £160 nett, in the gift of Rowland Smith, Esq., and held, since 1858, by the Rev. Francis Wellington Moore. The tithes were appropriated by Henry, Earl of Lancaster, 1332, to the Hospital of the Blessed Virgin at Leicester, reserving the Bishop's dues, a payment of £10 yearly to the Prior of Tutbury as heretofore, and a sufficient salary for the maintenance of a vicar. James I. granted the rectory, with all its tithes, appurtenances, &c., to Henry Butler and Henry Ogle. Afterwards it belonged to the family of Pindar, from whom it has descended to Earl Beauchamp. A handsome vicarage house was erected on Castle Hill in 1863, at a cost of about £3,000.

The church stands some distance from the village, which is thus accounted for by a local legend. The site originally chosen was near the castle, but night after night the Devil pulled down the work of the builders and removed the materials to the present site, until the patience of the villagers were exhausted, and they built it where it now stands. This legend, however, is not confined to Duffield; we have heard similar ones related of churches in Yorkshire and elsewhere.

Of Nonconformist places of worship the earliest was the Wesleyan Chapel in King Street, originally erected in 1777, and rebuilt in 1855. It is an unattractive building of stone, lighted by six circular-headed windows. The General Baptist Chapel was erected in 1830, at a cost of £500; a schoolroom was added in 1877, at an expense of £180; and in 1882 the chapel was refurnished, and the school enlarged, at a further outlay of £600. The front is brick with circular-headed windows and heavy stone dressings, which have a pleasing effect. Within are mural monuments to William Abell and John Taylor. The latter was deacon for 27 years, and was the chief contributor to the erection of the first chapel. The Methodist Free Chapel is a massive stone structure, built in 1843 at a cost of £700. In 1887, the interior was rearranged and converted into two storeys—chapel and schoolrooms. It is very tastefully furnished. The Boys' Endowed School is a very attractive building of stone, erected in 1867 in lieu of the old school, which has been converted into a parish room. Surrounding the school is about an acre of ground which the County Council have rented and planted with fruit trees as an experimental fruit growing plot, under the management of Mr. E. Luckhurst, F.R.H.S. The school will accommodate 160, and has an average attendance of 120. A separate school for girls, with teacher's house, was built in 1870. The erection was aided by a benefaction from the friends of the late Parkin Jeffcock, Esq., as a memorial of his great exertions in the work of education. There is an average attendance of 90. The infants also have been provided with a separate school, which was formerly the Unitarian Chapel. The average attendance is 84.

A Cemetery covering four acres, delightfully situated on the Hazlewood road, was laid out in 1880. There are two mortuary chapels and a very handsome lodge. The cemetery is under the control of a burial board. The village is lighted with gas. The works and manager's house were built in 1866, and belong to the Duffield, Allestree and Quarndon Gas Light & Coke Co., Ltd. The Working Men's Club Room was erected in 1893. It is a brick structure of a very pleasing style of architecture, and cost over £300, raised chiefly by a bazaar. It comprises a large recreation room and a reading room. Within the portico, very finely carved in wood, is the motto, Ad Majorem Dei Gloriam (To the Greater Glory of God). This was the work of the Misses Miles, through whose perseverance and energy the funds were obtained for the erection of the club. The same ladies have also provided a wooden building in which the youths of the village meet nightly for recreation. The village has also its Working Men's Conservative Club and its Literary Institute.

Duffield Hall is an ancient Elizabethan mansion, formerly the property and residence of Thomas Porter Bonell, Esq., whose only daughter and heiress married Sir Charles Colville. Charles Robert Colville, Esq., of Lullington, only son of the latter, sold the hall and part of the estate, in 1859, to Rowland Smith, Esq., J.P., D.L., the present owner and occupier, who represented South Derbyshire in Parliament from 1868 to 1874. Duffield Park, an old Tudor house, was modernised about the middle of last century, when the original mullion windows with their label moulds were removed and sash ones substituted. At the same time an attic storey was built, obliterating the gable, and thus changing, but not improving, the architectural features of the house. Tamworth House, a building in the classic style of architecture, dates from about 1690. It was the residence of the last Lord Tamworth, and is now the property and seat of Isaac Newton Woodiwiss, Esq., by whom it has been recently enlarged. Duffield Bank is the residence of Arthur Percival Heywood, Esq. Duffield Bank House, the property and residence of F. C. Gillett, Esq., is a venerable looking house, partially covered with ivy, situated near the Derwent, and surrounded by shrubberies and plantations. Bank Wood, the residence and property of William Heathcote, Esq., J.P., is a large mansion of stone, delightfully situated high up on the ridge above the left bank of the river, and surrounded by tastefully laid-out grounds and plantations. It was erected in 1881, and very considerably enlarged in 1891 by the present owner. The Early English windows, with their stone mullions, have a pleasing effect. The interior fittings and furniture are chiefly oak, and the decorations are after the best models of past ages. The dining-room is a very fine apartment, elaborately furnished in carved oak. The drawing-room is also furnished after the old English fashion. The three brackets supporting the chimneypiece are worthy of notice. They represent three heads, exquisitely carved in oak. Manor Farm—the property of Major T. White, lord of the manor—is occupied by Mr. Joseph Draper. The house is an 18th century structure, with mullioned windows, and stands on the site of the ancient manor house. Above one of the windows is R. P. Jodrell, and the date 1773.

Makeney is a hamlet pleasantly seated on rising ground, $1\frac{1}{4}$ miles N. by E. from Duffield. The old hall, now a farmhouse, was the residence of the Bradshaws; and it is said, but doubtfully, that President Bradshaw, who pronounced sentence of death on the ill-fated Charles I., was born here. Farnah is a scattered hamlet $1\frac{1}{4}$ miles from Duffield, consisting of Farnah Hall and a few farm and cottage houses. A portion of the hamlet, containing the hall, is in Windley township. Chevin is a hamlet, partly in this township and partly in Belper. Farnah Green is another hamlet in Duffield township. The Primitive Methodists have a chapel here, which they rent from Mrs. Hitchcock. On the wall is a marble tablet to Thomas Millward, erected by the late Rev. Mr. Jenkins, of Hazelwood.

WINDLEY is a township in the parish of Duffield, containing 1,158 acres of land, belonging chiefly to Lord Scarsdale, who is lord of the manor, and J. G. Crompton, Esq., B.A., J.P., D.L., and C.A. The ratable value is £2,133, and the population in 1891 was 169. The soil is light and sandy, and the subsoil sand and gravel. A considerable portion of the land is laid down in grass; oats, barley, and turnips, are also grown to some extent. The village is small and stands $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles N.W. from Duffield, and about half-a-mile from Hazelwood station. The Baptists have a chapel and Sunday school here, built in 1846 and 1855 respectively. Windley Hall is a large whitewashed stone building, the property of Mr. Crompton. It is now divided, and a portion is in the occupation of Mr. Burrows. The brewhouse and malt kiln have been converted into a cheese manufactory, in the occupation of Mrs. Sheldon. A little north of the village is The Lillies, a handsome mansion, the property and residence of J. G. Crompton, Esq. It is delightfully situated on an eminence, and is approached by a drive nearly a mile in length up the rising ground. In the dining room are several fine oil paintings, amongst which is a portrait of Colonel Hacker, the bearer of the death summons of Charles I., and who stood on the scaffold when the unfortunate king was executed. The grounds around the house exhibit some beautiful landscape gardening.

By the roadside stands a mill and a public house. The latter is named Puss-in-Boots, and on one side of the hanging sign is a good painting of grimalkin in boots, with staff in right fore paw, en route for somewhere. On the other side are the following lines:—

The water kindly turns the mill
While I grind corn for many;
And ale, I hope, may further still
Assist to turn the penny.
Then try my lads, if soon or late,
How ale your strength recruits,
You'll ever find a cheering bait
With honest Puss-in-Boots.

The hamlet of Farnah is partly in Windley township.

LOCAL WORTHY.—The late Dr. E. Hoskins, of Duffield House, who died Sept. 21, 1891, at the age of 76, achieved for himself considerable fame as a surgeon by the marvellous operations he performed some years ago. He was also a profound Shakesperian scholar, and wrote a book on the plays of the great dramatist. He possessed very considerable histrionic powers, and had he chosen the stage for a profession he would undoubtedly have reached the first rank amongst the actors of the day. He was a highly cultured speaker, and his oration at the Shakesperian Tercentenary Banquet, in Derby, was said by the "Morning Herald" to have been "the best Shakesperian oration delivered on that memorable occasion, the one at Stratford-on-Avon not excepted."

CHARITIES.—Webster's Charity, vested in trustees, consists of the income derived from £5,089 18s. 9d. in 2½ per cent. consolidated stock, two-thirds thereof to be distributed amongst the poor and the remaining third to be applied for the benefit of the Boys' Endowed School. Will dated 1685. Old Almshouse Fund consists of the dividends of £333 3s. 4d., derived partly from the sale of the Bradshaw almshouse many years ago. Edward Potterill, by will dated 1667, founded almshouses for two poor persons, who receive weekly the dividends of £223 10s. in the 2½ per cent. consolidated stock

HAZELWOOD.

Hazelwood, formerly included in the parish of Duffield, contains 1,235 acres; ratable value, £2,679; and population (1891) 1,235. The landowners are the Exors. of George Henry Strutt, Esq., Belper Strutt, Esq., Makeney; Lord Scarsdale; the trustees of Belper; Sir John Gay Newton Alleyne, Bart., Hazelwood. The soil is subsoil clay and ratchel; the land is chiefly in pasture. There is a quarry in the township. Hazelwood is in the hundred of Appleton division, county court district, and poor law union of Belper division and rural deanery of Duffield.

The manor anciently belonged to the Blounts, of Belper. In 1367, Sir Walter Blount granted it to Sir Godfrey Foljambe. It has been only a temporary transfer, as another Sir Walter Blount, a century later, died seized of this and other manors. There is no trace of there having been formerly a castle here, but there is no other than the traces of the foundations of a large building, surrounded it, on a farm near the Wesleyan chapel.

The village, if houses so scattered can be called such, is 1½ miles N.W. of Derby, 2½ S.W. from Belper, and 1 mile from the station of Wirksworth branch of the Midland railway. The church, dedicated to St. Andrew, was erected in 1845, at a cost of about £2,000, raised by subscription. Afterwards a district was allotted to it. It is a handsome church in Gothic style, strongly buttressed, and comprises chancel, nave, south porch, and a western bell turret containing two bells. The chancel is separated from the nave by a handsome moulded arch supported by circular piers on either side. The east window of three lights has stained glass, as also are the windows of the nave—six of which are on the side of the chancel arch is a marble tablet: one to the memory of Horner Jenkins, first vicar of Hazelwood, the other to Colonel Colville, of Kempsey House, Worcester, to whose piety are mainly due the school and vicarage house, the assignment of the district, and the benefice of Hazelwood. The nave is spacious, and well backed pews of pitch-pine to seat 290. The pulpit is sculptured in oak, elaborately-carved oak, designed, made, and presented by Sir John Gay Newton Alleyne, Bart., 1893. The font was given by Julia Colville, a vicarage, worth £200 per annum, with residence, in the parish of Southwell, and held by the Rev. William Henry Turner, F.R.S. The ecclesiastical district includes part of Shottle, where there is a small chapel.

The National School, with teacher's house, is a good building, erected at the same time as the church, at a cost of about £1,000, a portion of which was contributed by Colonel Colville. There is a Sunday school with an average attendance of 88. The Wesleyans have a chapel, built in 1814, and enlarged and improved in 1890, at a cost of £120.

Hazelwood Hall, now a farmhouse, bears unmistakable signs of splendour. The Knowle is a commodious residence, the property of Mr. Hull. Holmside is a large stone house, occupied by C. H. B. B.

Chevin House, the property and residence of Sir John Gay Newton Alleyne, Bart., M.I.C.E., J.P., C.A., is a large mansion of stone, placed on an eminence 536 feet above the sea level. In the grounds is a large telescope, by the present owner, and fitted with a large telescope and instruments for observing the "orbs of heaven." Sir John Gay Newton Alleyne and his family. His ancestor, Reynold Alleyne, was one of the first settlers in the settlement made in the island of Barbados. He acquired the property there, and the family subsequently rose to the highest distinction in the assembly of the island.

The district abounds with beautiful scenery, but the only spot we need particularise is a deep narrow ravine, through which a brook flows, hissing and splashing amongst the rocks. The sides are exceedingly steep, and permit only a few alders, sloe bushes, and brambles to find sufficient root-hold; and so deep and narrow is the gorge that the sun scarcely penetrates to the bottom of the chasm. This ravine, known as the Depth of Lumb, is much frequented by tourists and pleasure seekers in the summer time, but is seen to the best advantage when the brook is swollen after a season of rain.

CHARITIES.—The sum of 11s. is distributed amongst poor widows; 18s. 4d. is received from Gisborne's Charity, and spent in flannel, which is given to the deserving poor; the sum of 50s. is given in sums of 10s. to aged and needy parishioners who are not in receipt of parish relief from the Belper Union.

SHOTTLE AND POSTERN form a joint township containing 3,729 acres, in the civil parish of Duffield, but for all ecclesiastical purposes under Hazelwood. The ratable value is £4,801, and the population in 1891 was 432. The Duke of Devonshire is lord of the manor and owner of the whole township, with the exception of about 60 acres, which belong to Messrs. George Hy. and George Herbert Strutt. The district is purely agricultural; the soil is a variable mixture of sand and gravel; the subsoil clay and gritstone. There are upwards of 120 acres of woodland, and the greater portion of the rest of the township is in pasture.

Shottle is an ancient manor, and was given, together with the adjoining manor of Duffield, to Henry de Ferrers by William the Conqueror. Its previous owner was Gamel, and at the time of the Domesday Survey it was held under Henry de Ferrers by one Godric, apparently, from his name, an Englishman. In later times the manor came into the possession of the Earl of Newcastle, from whom it has descended to the present owner.

The village of Shottle consists of a number of widely scattered houses, about three miles W. from Belper, and near the station of its own name on the Wirksworth branch of the Midland railway. A Mission Church was built a few years ago by the Duke of Devonshire, who pays £50 per annum to the vicar of Hazelwood for officiating in it. It is a substantial stone edifice, consisting of a small apsidal chancel, nave (with bell turret), and western porch; but it is not as yet consecrated. The Baptists have a neat little chapel, erected in 1882; previous to which time they held their services in the upper room of an outhouse on Sycamore farm. It is comfortably furnished and well lighted. The school was built in 1824, and will accommodate 50 children. On an old slab, built into the wall, is the following inscription:—"Ralph Dowley, of Shottle, who departed this life on April the 28, 1741, he left to this school 40 pounds ye interest of which to be paid for ever for ye learning of poor children in Shottle, 1745." His widow added £35 to the legacy, and the money was invested in land. Two-thirds of the rent (£6 10s.) is given to the school, and the remaining third (£3 5s.) is, by the bequest of Mrs. Dowley, paid to the Congregational Chapel at Wirksworth. Most of the farmhouses are of recent erection, and possess all modern conveniences. Lammas, or more accurately Lambhouse, still retains its old-fashioned appearance, but its whitewashed walls are the picture of cleanliness.

Shottle Gate is a hamlet about one mile nearer Belper. A Lecture Room was built here a few years ago, in which religious services are also held. Shottle House is a large farmhouse with a very imposing appearance, erected by the Messrs. Strutt in 1855. The outbuildings are extensive, and fitted with every modern improvement. A little distance from Shottle Gate, near Black Brook, is Shottle Wesleyan Chapel, erected by Thomas Slater, the pioneer of Methodism in this neighbourhood, and enlarged by his son and daughter, John and Phoebe Slater, in 1816. Mr. Slater was a farmer, but was known throughout the district as Parson Slater; and he is said to have preached three times in one day in towns so far apart as Derby, Nottingham, and Leicester. Cowers, a modern corruption of Cowhouse, is a hamlet near Shottle station.

Postern is a hamlet of widely scattered farmhouses, three Belper. In the front wall of the house occupied by Mr. Watt a well-executed coat of arms, which was brought by Mr. Watt where he was bailiff for the Master of Blantyre, and position, about seven years ago.

HEAGE.

Heage, or High Edge, is a parish and township containing 2,366 acres and 2,490 inhabitants. The total ratable value is £8,435. Albert Frederick Hurt, Esq., is lord of the manor, and principal landowner. Messrs. Strutt, of Belper; C. J. Else, Esq., Bull Bridge Hill, Ambergate; and F. N. Smith, Esq., Wingfield Park, have estates here, and there are also several small freeholders. It is in the hundred of Appletree, petty sessional division, poor law union, and county court district of Belper, rural deanery of Duffield, and forms with Belper an electoral division under the Local Government Act.

The surface is diversified by swelling uplands, among which the river Derwent winds its way in many a sinuous bend. The soil is various; it is sandy on the hills, and strong and heavy in the lower grounds, resting on gritstone and clay.

The great Midland coalfield extends into the parish. A seam 5ft. 8in. in thickness is reached at a depth of five yards. Associated with the coal are bands of ironstone, which was formerly worked to a considerable extent at Morley Park. Previous to 1780 there were in Derbyshire only two furnaces for smelting the ore, at both of which charcoal was the fuel used; in that year a furnace in which coke was exclusively employed was erected here by Mr. Francis Hurt, and a few years later he introduced the steam engine in working the blast. Another furnace was erected in 1818, but both have been out of blast for some years, and men are now employed breaking the slag for the repair of the roads.

The manor is not mentioned in Domesday Book, but at an early period it became one of the possessions of the Duchy of Lancaster, and remained with the Crown till 1629, when it was sold by Charles I. It has belonged to the ancestors of the present owner for a considerable length of time.

The village is situated on the Chesterfield road, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles N.E. from Belper, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles from Duffield, and two miles from Ambergate station, on the Midland railway. The houses are scattered along the tops and sides of the hills and in the hollows, forming practically two villages, known as Over Heage and Nether Heage. The inhabitants are chiefly colliers. Heage was formerly a chapelry under Duffield, but it is not known when the first chapel was erected. It is recorded in a letter dated "Darbie, the 25th day of June, 1545," and given in extenso in Lyson's "Derbyshire," that a dreadful hurricane swept over the county on the 20th of the same month, doing great damage in various places.

Amongst them was Heage, where it "pullyd downe the chappyl and the moete part of the towne." The present church, which is dedicated to St. Luke, was very considerably enlarged in 1836, when the west end was taken down and a nave erected transeptwise, which gave 362 additional sittings. At the north end of the nave is a small tower surmounted by an open bell turret. The porch bears the date 1752, and in the wall near it is inserted a stone inscribed "G 1661 P," run in lead. The chancel was restored in 1870, and the rectory house enlarged at a cost of about £1,000. The nave is seated with open benches and old-fashioned pews. The east window is a pointed one of three lights, and in the north and south walls are square-headed ones, divided into two lights by stone mullions. Two of these, one on the north side, the other on the south, are memorials of Florence Catherine Smith, of Wingfield Park, and Martin Tucker Smith respectively; and a tablet of black and white marble commemorates Ellen Hawkins, who died in 1856. The nave is of cut stone, and lighted by acutely-pointed windows, but does not harmonise in style with the older portion of the edifice. The organ stands on the north side, and was purchased in 1878 at a cost of £270. The ancient octagonal font stands in the garden of The Firs, where it was placed by the late Mr. James Lynam, who was churchwarden when the church was enlarged. The churchyard is entered by a handsome lych gate, erected by the parishioners in 1892, in loving memory of the Rev. Henry Moore Mosse, M.A., rector of the parish for 33 years. The graveyard was consecrated in 1847, previous to which time burials and marriages took place at Duffield. The baptismal register dates from 1819. The living is now a rectory, worth £180 net per annum, in the gift of the vicar of Duffield, and held by the Rev. Geo. A. Tindall, B.A. (Cantab). There are 16 acres of glebe at Kirk Ireton, and about the same amount at Wensley. The Rectory House was erected in 1842, and enlarged in 1870. It is pleasantly situated within its own well-arranged grounds, a little distance from the church.

Heage is well supplied with educational facilities. There is a good National School, erected by subscription in 1841 for the education of the poor in the principals of the Established Church. It is now appropriated to girls and infants, and has accommodation for 180. The first provision for the education of the poor was made by George Storer, who, in 1705, conveyed a house and about 26 acres of land to seven trustees, the rents thereof to be applied in apprenticing one boy yearly, in paying for two sermons in Heage Chapel every Trinity Sunday, and in paying for the education of poor children. A schoolroom was built in 1810 out of funds of the charity, and this was superseded by the present school, erected in 1865. There is an average attendance of 60. The old schoolroom has been converted into a reading room. The Heage School Board have a school at Over Heage, and another at Ridgeway. The former is a neat structure of stone, well ventilated and replete with educational appliances. There is accommodation for 144, but the average attendance considerably exceeds that number.

The Methodist Free Church (Ebenezer) was built in 1855, and subsequently enlarged. There is a small burial ground in front, in which are three headstones. The Primitive Methodist Chapel, erected in 1828, is a plain building of brick; the lower part is used as a dwelling-house. There is a chapel belonging to the same society at Nether Heage. It is a handsome edifice of cut stone, erected in 1878, at a cost of £400. There is also a Methodist Free Church Mission Room.

Crow Trees, a farmhouse on the Ripley road, is the property and residence of Mr. Joseph Morell. It was partially rebuilt by his ancestor, in 1712, and is an interesting specimen of the Queen Anne style. In the orchard is a boxwood tree of colossal size. On the same road are a few old-fashioned stone houses with thatched roofs and mullioned windows, which have belonged to the Alton family for many generations. One was long the residence of the family, and contains a fine old oak cabinet, bearing the initials I.A. (Joseph Alton) and the date 1628.

Heage Hall, the property of Messrs. E. & J. Smith Shore, and residence of the latter, is an ancient building with a modern addition. The older portion has stone mullioned windows, many of which have been built up. Some of the bedrooms retain their old oak wainscoting. It was formerly the house of a branch of the Poles. The first who settled here was Henry Pole, one of the sons of Peter Pole, Esq., of Radbourne, M.P. for Derbyshire in the reign of Henry IV. The initials of another, G.P. (George Pole), with the date 1661, may be seen in the wall of the church, and by whom the church was probably restored. The Argyles were the next occupants, and it was subsequently purchased by the Shores. This family is supposed to be descended from the Shores of Darley Dale. The grandfather of the present owners (Isaac Shore) was a noted clock-maker in Heage, and many of his clocks are still to be found in the neighbourhood.

Ambergate is a prosperous village and important railway junction, situated about 2½ miles from Belper. Many good houses and shops have been erected, and there are extensive saw mills and lime works, and a wire manufactory. The surrounding scenery is varied and beautiful. The Derwent flows close by, and is here joined by the river Amber. A church, dedicated to St. Anne, was erected here in 1891-2 at a cost of £2,000, chiefly defrayed by J. Thewlis Johnson, Esq., of Oak Hurst. It is a handsome edifice of dressed stone, in the Early English style, comprising apsidal chancel, north and south transepts, nave, and north porch. The west gable carries a small bell turret. The chancel arch is pointed and lofty, and crossed by a temporary wooden screen surmounted by a large cross. The nave is spacious and fitted with open low-backed seats. The north transept is used as a choir vestry, and the opposite one is intended for an organ chamber. The five windows of the chancel are single lights, those on the north and south sides of the nave are two-light ones, and the west window is a large one of three lights, given by the Sunday school children. All the stone was obtained from the Ridgeway quarry, and the work reflects great credit on Mr. J. Glossop, the builder. The interior was chastely decorated in 1894, and a new organ, by Messrs. Young & Son, Manchester, placed in the organ chamber. The Rev. J. E. C. Colyer is the curate-in-charge. Under the church is a well-lighted school-room, attended by about 100 children.

The United Methodist Free Church (Bethel Chapel) is a neat stone edifice, with pretty porch and attractive frontage, erected in 1859. On the east wall inside is a handsome marble tablet to the memory of Thomas Summerside, who died in 1880, through whose exertions chiefly this chapel was built. Mr. Summerside was a Northumbrian, and life-long acquaintance of the celebrated George Stephenson. He published his recollections of the great engineer in 1878, under the title of "Anecdotes, reminiscences, and conversations of and with the late George Stephenson, father of railways, characteristically illustrative of his adroitness, sarcasm, benevolence, and intrepidity, by Thomas Summerside, who knew him when he was poor, served him when he was rich, and assisted to carry him to his final resting place; with portraits of George and Robert Stephenson." Another monument commemorates William Forwood, who died in 1888. Under the chapel is a well-lighted schoolroom.

Hurst Arms Hotel, near the railway station, is an elegant stone building, erected in 1874, in lieu of the old "Thatched House Tavern." Every accommodation and comfort can be obtained here by tourist, visitor, or commercial man.

Toad Moor is a hamlet almost adjoining Ambergate, which will at no distant date lose its identity in the younger and more prosperous village. Here is a Wesleyan chapel, well lighted with semi-circular headed windows. The Derwent is here crossed by a stone bridge of two spans, erected in 1792, in place of one that fell immediately after its erection. It is the property of Mr. Hurst, and a halfpenny toll is extracted from each passenger.

Buckland Hollow is a hamlet pleasantly situated one mile N.E. from Heage. Here is a Wesleyan Chapel, built about 1840 by Mr. David Wheateroft, then owner of the land, and purchased by the Wesleyans from F. N. Smith, Esq., in 1886. It stands within its own neatly laid-out grounds, and is somewhat unique in style, being lighted from the top by an octagonal dome. Near this is the lodge for F. N. Smith's residence, erected by Mr. Wheateroft about 1849. It is built of small blocks of limestone, with dressings and buttresses of freestone, and is quite ecclesiastical in its appearance. Up on the high ground, some distance from Buckland Hollow, is Prospect's farmhouse, a fine modern structure in the Swiss style, whence extensive views may be obtained.

Morley Park is a scattered hamlet about half a mile S. from Heage. Here were situated the ironworks before mentioned. The blast furnaces are now in ruins. The Hawkins were resident proprietors here for over 300 years, and their descendants still remain in the parish. Booth Gate is a small hamlet near Over Heage. Ridgeway is a hamlet delightfully situated on the Belper and Crich road, half-a-mile from Ambergate. It took its name from the Ridge family, who owned the land, and one of whom built Ridgeway House for a residence in the early part of last century. Local tradition libels his memory by asserting that he stole the money from the Argyles, of Heage Hall. The house is now the property and residence of Mr. John Cox. There are several good houses in Ridgeway, belonging to Mr. George Key. There was formerly an Independent chapel here, which was purchased by Mr. Key in 1877, and converted into cottages. The Heage School Board has a school here, an attractive stone building, erected in 1877, at a cost of nearly £1,000. Good building stone is quarried at Ridgeway. A chalybeate spring was discovered here by a labourer in 1767, the waters of which were reputed efficacious in ulcerous disorders.

Saw Mills is a hamlet on the Cromford canal, which had its origin in the stone and marble works formerly carried on here. A brick manufactory now gives employment to about 50 men and boys.

A considerable portion of Heage was formerly common, which was enclosed under powers of an Act of Parliament obtained in 1769, and divided amongst the freeholders and copyholders.

CHARITIES.—James Holland, in 1744, vested £150 in the hands of trustees, the interest of £100 to be paid to the minister of this chapel for performing Divine service in Heage chapel, and the interest of £50 to be distributed in bread or money amongst the poor attending public worship in this chapel. The sum of £6 is received from the Rev. Francis Gibbons's charity and distributed in flannel. Sixteen half sovereigns are received half-yearly from Webster's charity and distributed amongst 16 poor people.

Post, Money Order, Savings Bank, Insurance and Annuity Office at Chapel Farm, Heage; Miss Rebecca Alton, postmistress. Letters, via Belper, are delivered at 9-0 a.m., and despatched at 6-15 p.m., on week days only. Wall Letter Box, Buckland Hollow, cleared at 6-0 p.m. from Pentrich.

HOLBROOKE.

Holbrooke is a small township formerly included in Duffield, but now for all ecclesiastical and civil purposes a distinct parish. It is in the Appletree hundred; petty sessional division, county court district, and union of Belper; and deanery of Duffield. It is under the control of a parish council of seven members, and elects one guardian and rural district councillor. The total area of the parish by Ordnance measurement is 887 acres; ratable value £2,798, and the population in 1891 was 1,094. The manorial rights are divided between Canon Carr and Godfrey Meynell, Esq., of Meynell Langley; and the principal landowners are the Rev. Canon Carr, G. Herbert Strutt, Esq., Makeney Hall; and Godfrey Meynell, Esq.

At the time of the Domesday Survey, Holbrooke was included in the manor of Duffield, held by Henry de Ferrers, and was then waste. It passed with that manor to the Duchy of Lancaster, and remained with the Crown till the reign of Charles I., who sold his Duffield manors to the Corporation of the City of London. Subsequently the Bradshaws had an estate here. In 1790, the common lands amounting to about 300 acres were enclosed, pursuant to an Act of Parliament obtained in 1785, and divided. The number of landowners who obtained allotments was 37.

The village is situated 5½ miles N.E. from Derby, 1 mile from Milford, and the same distance from Coxbench station, on the Ripley branch of the Midland railway. The church, dedicated to St. Michael, was erected in 1761 by the Rev. Samuel Bradshaw, who endowed it with £30 per annum, charged on the Holbrooke estate. It was rebuilt and enlarged by the late William Evans, Esq., in 1841; and in 1887, it was entirely reseatd, renovated, and a vestry added at a total cost of £1,027, raised by voluntary subscriptions. The late Sir T. W. Evans gave £1,000 in augmentation of the living; this and other benefactions were met by grants from the Ecclesiastical Commissioners, and the vicarage is now worth £196 per annum. It is in the gift of and held by the Rev. E. Carr, M.A., hon. Canon of Carlisle, who resides at Holbrooke Hall—a handsome mansion surrounded by a small park.

A school for boys and girls was erected in 1837, by William Evans, Esq., and five years later he erected another for infants on Holbrooke Moor. A school for boys was added to the latter by the late Sir T. W. Evans. The United Free Methodists have a chapel at Holbrooke Moor which was considerably enlarged in 1883.

COXBENCH is a small village partly in this parish and partly in that of Horsley. The Franceys had an estate and hall here, which passed through many generations of the family. The coheirss of Robert Franceys, Esq., the last male heir, carried it in marriage to the Johnsons, from whom it passed to the Meynells. The hall is a plain mansion occupied by Major Beadnell, late King's Own Scottish Borderers.

Bargate is a village partly in this parish and partly in Belper and Kilburn. It stands on the Heage and Makeney Road, $1\frac{1}{2}$ miles from Belper, and about the same distance from Kilburn station. The inhabitants are chiefly employed in agriculture and framework knitting.

CHARITIES.—John Lockoe gave two acres of land, called Spencer's Croft, the rent thereof to be paid to the poor of Holbrooke for ever. In or about the year 1808 the turnpike road was cut through this land, for which £20 8s. 8d. was paid to the trustees of the charity. A further portion of the land was sold in 1822, and the money invested. The remainder of the croft was sold in 1874, and the total capital of the charity (£578 6s. 8d.) is now invested in the $2\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. consolidated stock, producing £15 18s. per annum, which is distributed amongst the poor. Webster's Charity (see Dufield): Twelve aged persons receive from this charity the sum of 10s. each twice a year. Potterill's Almshouses, founded by Edward Potterill in 1667, for two poor persons, each of whom receives 1s. weekly, and also some clothes and coals at Christmas.

Post Office, Holbrooke; Samuel Sheldon, postmaster. Letters, via Derby, are delivered at 7-30 a.m., and despatched at 7-45 p.m. Nearest Telegraph Office, Kilburne (one mile).

IRONVILLE AND CODNOR PARK.

This ecclesiastical parish was formed by an Order in Council, June, 1850. It embraces the district of Ironville, formerly in the parish of Alfreton, the ancient extra-parochial liberty of Codnor Park, and portions of the parishes of Selston, Greasley, Codnor, and Pentrich. It extends into the county of Nottingham, and lies within three parliamentary divisions and two archdeaconries.

For civil purposes, Ironville forms one of the four wards under the Alfreton Urban District Council, having a population of 1,715, and belongs wholly to the Butterley Company, Ltd. The village is compact, and consists of one principal street and several rows of houses. A wide space between forms the Market Place, where a market is held on Saturdays. The inhabitants are chiefly employed in the neighbouring ironworks erected here in 1852 by the Butterley Company, at a cost of £10,000. A substantial stone edifice, comprising apsidal, nave, transept and tower, in which is one bell. A considerable amount of money has been bestowed upon the chancel. The wooden roof, groined and painted in blue and gold to represent the starry firmament, and a fine ornamented the upper portion of the side walls. Beneath this is a frieze of blue and gold, on which are inscribed the Lord's Prayer, the Creed, and the Apostles' Creed. The three two-light windows are filled with glass, representing various scenes in the life of our Lord, in the life of Jessop, who died in 1852. The nave is spacious, and covered with a roof, panelled, and coloured pale blue. The windows, six in number, of the ordinary square type, divided by a transom into four panes, filled with stained glass. The north transept is used as a vestry, and is appropriately decorated. A two-light pointed window in the north transept, memorial of Francis Wright, Esq., of Osmaston Manor, who was erected as a tribute of gratitude by the parishioners of Osmaston. Above the entrance door, in the south transept, is a handsome window of stained glass, representing the cardinal virtues—Faith, Hope, Charity, and Love, with an inscription, "To the glory of God, and in memory of Elizabeth Wright, affectionate husband, May 23rd, 1893." An excellent organ, purchased in London, in 1878, at a cost of £720, stands in the north-east corner. A spacious gallery occupies the west end, increasing the accommodation. The living is a vicarage, in the gift of the Butterley Company. Rev. Rowland Paul Hills, M.A., LL.D., Cantab., and B.C.L., who has a yearly income is £250, of which the sum of £150 is derived from the rectory, given by the late Francis Wright, Esq., £76 from the Butterley Company, and £24 from offertories. The vicarage house, which stands west of the church, was also the gift of Mr. Wright.

Near the church are commodious schools, erected in 1852 by the Butterley Company, aided by a parliamentary grant of £490. The schools are for boys, girls, and infants—with a total accommodation of 100. One large room is appropriated to gymnastics and drill, and a room for swimming is taught, and encouraged by a yearly competition.

CODNOR PARK is an extra-parochial liberty, containing 1,000 acres, belonging chiefly to the Butterley Co., Ltd. Ratable value of the land £1,077. It is in the hundred of Morleston and Codnor, Parliamentary division, and Basford poor-law union.

The earliest mention of Codnor occurs in Domesday Book, which attaches to the place till it came into the possession of Henry de Grey, part of the 13th century. His eldest son, Richard, who succeeded him, built the castle, and surrounded it with a park of 2,000 acres. The castle was the principal seat, and for nine generations Grey succeeded Grey, and the name was prominently in the annals of the country. Henry de Grey died without issue in 1496, Codnor became the proper seat of the family. Sir John Zouch. The last of the Zouch family who resided at Codnor was John, who, in 1622, sold the estate to Dr. Neile, Archbishop of York, afterwards it was purchased from Richard Neile, Esq., by the Butterley Company, who was the last occupant of the castle. The site of the castle, part of the estate, are now the property of the Butterley Company. The castle is left of the old baronial fortress, and the mixture of stone and brick in it has undergone some modern restorations. The moat and the courtyard, now a kitchen garden, is enclosed on three sides. On one side are parts of three towers, and close by a round tower, the Dovecote, remains in good preservation. Connected with the castle is a chapel, of which all traces have disappeared. The font was

Dr. Woolley, of Heanor, from a neighbouring farmstead, where it was used as a pump trough, and now stands in the vicarage grounds at Ironville

It is related of Henry de Grey, the last of the family who owned Codnor, that he was much devoted to the study of alchemy; but whilst he was searching for the philosopher's stone, whereby to convert the baser metals into gold, he little dreamt of the vast wealth of coal and iron that lay beneath his feet. There is no record of the first discovery of these deposits, but it was probably in the second half of the 18th century. Furnaces for smelting the iron ore were erected about 1811 by the Butterley Company, and a third was added in 1825. At these works and at the collieries most of the inhabitants are employed. A handsome Institute has been erected by the company, containing their offices, swimming and other baths, Conservative club room and billiard and recreation rooms. In the park is a monument, erected by the workmen to the memory of William Jessop, Esq., of Butterley Hall, who died in 1852; and near is a substantial stone building called Monument Hall.

Stoneyford is a small village on the bank of the river Erewash, chiefly inhabited by colliers. A Mission Church, dedicated to the Holy Trinity, was erected here in 1890. Golden Valley is another colliery village. There is a neat Mission Church, which is also used as an infants' school. The Primitive Methodists have also a small chapel, built some sixty years ago.

The Midland railway passes through the township, and has a station called Codnor Park.

Atdecar Hall is a venerable-looking mansion, pleasantly situated off the Heanor and Codnor Park road. It was erected in 1668, and was for sometime the seat of the Burtons. It was afterwards in the possession of a younger branch of the Milneses, of Ashover. In later years it was the residence of Mr. Jessop, a former proprietor of the ironworks, whose monument crowns an eminence in Codnor Park. The hall, which stands within its own extensive grounds, has been converted into a preparatory school for boys between the ages of 7 and 14.

General Post Office, King William street, Ironville; William Sml. Greaves, postmaster. Letters, via Alfreton, arrive at 7-30 a.m. and 4-15 p.m. on week days, and at 7-30 a.m. on Sundays; and are despatched at 9-15 a.m., 6-20 and 7-30 p.m. (latter to Nottingham) on week days, and at 10-0 a.m. on Sundays.

MILFORD.

This is a large village situated on the banks of the Derwent, 1½ miles N. by E. from Duffield, in which township it is included for all civil purposes. Extensive works, including a cotton mill, bleaching and dye works, forge, &c., were erected here by the Messrs. Strutt about the beginning of the present century. The buildings extend along both banks of the river, the waters of which are utilised as the motive power of the machinery. The cotton trade has been discontinued, but bleaching and dyeing is still carried on to a considerable extent, giving employment to about 150 men, women, and boys. In connection with the works is a reading room and library, containing about 700 volumes. The river is here crossed by a good stone bridge of two arches, erected by the late Mr. Jedediah Strutt, who also constructed the road leading to it. In early times the chief means of conveyance across the river was on the backs of mules, and hence the place is called in Domesday Book Muleford, of which its present name is a corruption.

The population of the village having greatly increased since the establishment of the above-mentioned works, Milford, in 1846, was formed into a new parish, which included the village and portions of the townships of Duffield and Belper, comprising 3,000 acres. The population in 1891 was 1,381. The church, dedicated to the Holy Trinity, was built in 1846-7 at a cost of £2,200, exclusive of the site, which was given by Messrs. Strutt. It is a handsome edifice of stone, in the Early English style, built from the designs of Sir Gilbert Scott, and consists of chancel (with vestry), nave (with north aisle and south porch), and bell turret at the south-east corner. The nave is separated from the aisle by five arches springing from octagonal columns, and the west end is crossed by a gallery in which are the organ and choir seats. The roofs are open timbered, and the beams rest on carved figure heads. There is no burial ground; interments take place either at Duffield or Belper. The living is a vicarage, in the gift of the Crown and the Bishop of Southwell alternately, worth £165 per annum, and held by the Rev. Henry Cape, Montford, M.A. (Cambridge), who was appointed in 1892.

The first Nonconformist chapel was erected by the Primitive Methodists in 1823, and very considerably enlarged in 1883, at a cost of £330. A gallery is carried round three sides, and the interior is comfortably furnished to seat 300. The chapel is in the Belper circuit. The Wesleyan Chapel is a substantial structure of stone, built in 1842, at a cost of £520. It is galleried on three sides, and will seat about 300. The Methodist Free Chapel (Ebenezer Chapel) is a large stone structure, with Sunday school attached, erected in 1846, at a cost of about £1,000. The interior is neatly and comfortably arranged. There are memorial tablets on the walls to Mrs. Elizabeth Wilson and Samuel Richardson. The Baptist Chapel, which has sitting accommodation for 250, was built in 1849, at a cost of £350.

Messrs. Strutts' school was built about 80 years ago, and for a long time was entirely supported by those gentlemen. There are two departments, mixed and infants, having an average attendance of 290.

Milford House, a large stone mansion, was built by the late Jedediah Strutt, Esq., and is now the residence of the Hon. Frederick Strutt, J.P., C.C., youngest son of the late Lord Belper.

MORTON.

This is a parish and township in the hundred of Scarsdale; electoral division of Shirland; petty sessional division, county court district, and deanery of Alfreton; and union of Chesterfield. The total area is 1,252 acres, ratable value £7,294, and the population in 1891 was 750. R. S. W. Sitwell, Esq., Horsley, is lord of the manor and principal owner.

The earliest mention of Morton occurs in the will of Wulfric Spott in the year 1002, wherein it is given to Burton Abbey, together with the adjacent manor of Oggodestun (Ogston). At the time of the Domesday Survey, both these manors were held by Walter Deincourt; and Roger Deincourt in 1330 claimed a park and the right of having a gallows for the execution of criminals. Their chief seat for several generations was at Park Hall on the confines of this parish. On the failure of male issue the Deincourt estates passed by marriage to Lord Cromwell and Lord Lovel. Subsequently Morton and other estates came to the Leakes, who possessed them until the death of Nicholas Leake, Earl of Scarsdale, in 1736, when they were sold by the trustees. Morton was purchased by Henry Thornhill and others, who in 1749 sold it to Francis Sitwell, Esq., of Renishaw.

The soil is various, clay, sand, and marl, and the subsoil clay, ratchell, and rock. The land is mostly in grass. The Clay Cross Iron and Coal Co. have two collieries in the parish, one commenced in 1863, and the others in 1873. The coals worked are the deep hard and silkstone, of which there is a considerable output. Over 200 tons of slack are washed per day, from which about 100 tons of nuts are obtained. The remainder, unsaleable slack, is converted into coke. Gas is also made at the colliery and supplied to Morton and Stonebroom.

The village of Morton (the ton or town on the Moor), is situated on the Matlock and Mansfield Road, $3\frac{1}{4}$ miles N. from Alfreton, 7 S. from Chesterfield, and $\frac{3}{4}$ of a mile from Dove Hill station on the Erewash Valley branch of the Midland railway. The village has been considerably extended in recent years by the erection of a large number of houses for the accommodation of the employes of the colliery, &c. The church, dedicated to the Holy Cross, is mentioned in Domesday Book, but no portion of that edifice now remains. The present structure consists of chancel with vestry on the north side, nave, north aisle, south porch, and a tower at the west end. The body of the church was rebuilt in 1852, at a cost of £570. The tower, which is part of the old edifice, is low and surmounted by an embattled parapet with eight crocketed pinnacles, and four grotesque gargoyles. It is supposed to be 15th century work. The chancel is separated from the nave by a lofty pointed arch which springs from semi-octagonal pillars. The east window of three lights is a memorial of Mrs. A. Turbutt, who died in 1855. Under this window is an oak reedos extending the whole length of the wall. A pictorial window in the north wall commemorates the Rev. R. B. Turbutt, A.B., rector of the church, who died in 1841. A two-light window on the opposite wall is a tribute of filial affection to the memory of Mary Siddall, who died in 1869.

The north aisle is separated from the nave by three pointed arches supported on circular pillars. The windows are filled with stained glass, and there is another pictorial window on the south side of the nave. The font is octagonal in shape and massive, and covering it is a very fanciful oak pyramidal cover richly carved. The Turbutt family are buried here, and there are several marble tablets to their memory. The tower contains five bells; one long cracked has been re-cast, and two others added. The oldest bell bears the founder's mark, usually attributed to Richard Mellors, a wealthy bell founder of Nottingham, who died shortly after 1506, in which year he was mayor of that town. The registers date from 1575, and the churchwardens' accounts from before 1590.

The living is a rectory, valued in the King's Book at £11 9s. 11d, now worth £400, in the gift of St. John's College, Cambridge, and W. G. Turbutt, Esq., alternately, and held by the Rev. J. W. Maltby, B.A. The rectory house is a substantial stone residence, erected about 200 years ago.

A new school was erected in 1884, at a cost of £600. There are two departments—mixed and infants—with an average attendance of 192. The old school is now disused.

Morton House, the property and residence of Mr. R. Goodwin, was built in 1752. Another venerable old house, Padley Hall, or Padley Wood Hall, bears the initials I.P. (John Padley) with the date 1697 over one door, and over another I. & H.P., 1702. It was the home of a branch of the Padley family, and is now the residence of Mr. Charles Titterton.

CHARITIES.—The sum of £5 10s. is received from Gisborne's bequest, and distributed in warm clothing. A rent charge of 6s. 8d. is received by the churchwardens out of a field. It is supposed to have been left for the repair of the church by some person not now known.

Post, Money Order, Savings Bank, Insurance, and Annuity Office; Francis Wiliam Culverhouse, sub-postmaster. Letters, via Alfreton, arrive at 9-0 a.m., and are despatched at 5-0 p.m. on week-days only. Nearest Telegraph Office, Doe Hill Station, M.R.

PILSLEY.

Pilsley is a parish and township in the hundred of Scarsdale, electoral division of Shirland, petty sessional division and county court district of Alfreton, and poor law union and rural deanery of Chesterfield. Its boundaries enclose an area of 1,554 acres; ratable value, £14,127; and population, 2,328. The principal landowners are J. S. Sampson, Tibshelf; E. S. W. Sitwell, Horsley, Derby; Clay Cross Co.; William Thorpe, Esq., Pilsley; James Harker, Esq., Newbold, Chesterfield; Edward A. Storer, Esq., Nether Moor, Tibshelf; Mrs. F. Goodwin, Wirksworth; and F. Hall, Esq., Wirksworth. The Manchester, Sheffield, and Lincolnshire railway passes through the township, and has a station near the village. This branch was opened for passenger traffic on the 2nd January, 1833. Coal is extensively worked by the Pilsley Colliery Co. The pit was sunk about 30 years ago. Three seams are worked—deep hard coal, black shale, and Tupton. About 1,000 men and boys are employed, who turn out on an average 1,200 tons a day.

The manor anciently belonged to the Deincourts, afterwards to the Foljambes, from whom it passed by marriage to the Plumptions. The Leakes were the next owners; and in 1743 it was sold by the trustees of the Earl of Scarsdale to the Caltons, of Chesterfield. It changed hands again by sale in 1799, and was subsequently purchased by the late Luke Sampson. The manor house, with about 23 acres of land, was purchased from the Sampson family in 1880 by Mr. E. A. Storer.

The village is situated 6 miles S. from Chesterfield, $1\frac{1}{2}$ from North Wingfield, and half-a-mile from Doe Hill station on the Midland railway. The church, dedicated to St. Mary the Virgin, is a neat edifice of stone in the Gothic style, consisting of nave, chancel, south aisle, south porch, and a small spire at the west end. The total cost was about £2,500, towards which Mrs. Rowley contributed £500. There is accommodation for between 300 and 400. The ecclesiastical parish was formed in 1874, and is co-extensive with the township. The living is a vicarage, in the gift of the rector of North Wingfield; gross value £160, derived chiefly from tithes given by the patron, and a grant of £100 per annum received from the ecclesiastical commissioners. The present vicar is the Rev. S. C. Hayward, who was inducted in 1888. Adjoining the church is an institute, built in 1886, in which Sunday school is held.

The Wesleyan Methodists erected their first chapel here in 1843, at a cost of £110, and rebuilt it in 1868 on a larger scale, at a cost of upwards of £700. An organ was put in in 1883, at an expense of £285. There are also chapels belonging to the Primitive New Connection and the Methodist Free Church, both erected in 1877. There are two good schools, each having three departments, belonging to the Clay Lane United District School Board: one in the village, opened in 1876, the other at Park House, opened in 1889.

Post, Money Order, Savings Bank, and Telegraph Office, &c.; Wm. Fdk. Clayton, postmaster. Letters arrive from Chesterfield at 7-40 a.m., and are despatched at 4-30 and 7-30 p.m. Wall box, Pilsley lane; collections 4-40 and 7-40 p.m.

PINXTON.

Pinxton is a parish and township adjoining the Nottinghamshire border, in the hundred of Scarsdale; petty sessional division, county court district and deanery of Alfreton; and union of Mansfield. It formerly extended into Nottinghamshire, but by a recent re-arrangement of the boundary line the whole of the parish now lies within the county of Derby. The total area is 1,253 acres, ratable value £6984, and population 2,317. W. S. Coke, Esq., J.P., D.L., Brookhill Hall, who is lord of the manor, and Messrs. Coke & Co., are the principal landowners. The soil is various—light, stony, and medium; the sub-soil, ratchell and clay. More than half the land is laid down in grass, but turnips, oats, and wheat are also grown.

The manor of Pinxton is supposed to have been the Snodeswic which was given by Wulfrie Spott, as an appendage of Morton, to Burton Abbey in 1002, and it is most probably the Esnotrewic of the Domesday Book which was held by Drago under William Peveril. In the reign of Edward II., Robert le Wyne held this manor in conjunction with South Normanton of Grey and Grey of the King, and William le Wyne, in 1342, sold Normanton and Pinxton to Sir Alured de Solney. This family ended in two coheiresses, who conveyed the manors in moieties to Sir Thomas Stafford and Sir Nicholas Longford. The Staffords shortly afterwards sold their share to Sir William Babington, Chief Justice of the Common Pleas in the reign of Henry VI. He died in 1455. The Longfords appear to have become possessed of both moieties, and in the latter part of the 16th century the manor and advowson of the church were purchased by the Revells, from whom they passed to an ancestor of the present owner.

The village, which is of considerable extent, having doubled in size during the last 20 years, is situated $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles E. from Alfreton, six miles S.W. from Mansfield, and is accessible both by the Midland and Great Northern railways. Gas works were established in 1870, and Waterworks have been constructed by the Pinxton Coal Co. Coal mining is the principal industry of the parish, and to the energy and enterprise of the Colliery Co., Pinxton owes its prosperity. They have broken through the trammels of the Coal Ring and supply coals direct from their depôts without the intervention of middlemen, and increased prices. Four seams are worked—the Main Soft Coal, Low Main, and Silkstone, and the weekly output is giving employment to over 1,500 men and boys.

The Church, dedicated to St. Helen, is situated on rising ground, the centre of the parish, and consists of chancel, nave, west porch, transept, and tower. The nave and chancel were rebuilt in the style about the middle of last century, and the date, 1755, in the beams of the nave roof, probably indicates the year when placed. The chapel and tower are parts of the old building of the 14th century, but oblong, and adjoins the south chapel—a most untenable lower chamber is used as a vestry. The belfry contains two bells of pre-Reformation date, bears the inscription—Ave Maria Gratia Dominus tecum (Hail most holy Mary, full of grace and thee). The organ chamber corresponds in style of architecture to the nave or transept. The chancel is lighted by a window of three lights, filled with stained glass, representing the "Last Supper." The altar, of marble, highly polished, is inscribed "In ever-loving memory of John Odingsells Coke, this altar is dedicated by his sister, Geraldine." The chancel floor is an incised flag bearing the following quaint inscription in the spaces between the words:—

MARCH 12 1674
INTERED THE BODY OF MARY KEL
SALAGED 32

The nave is lighted by single-light semicircular-headed windows at the west end. Under this stands the old font, octagonal in shape, on a moulded base. In the pavement of the aisle of the south transept are fragments of incised slabs. On one is part of the stem of a cross, having on the right side a pair of shears and on the left a sword, with a date from 1561. The living is a rectory, worth £230 per annum, and in the gift of W. S. Coke, Esq., and held by the Rev. Sidney Salmond, in 1885. In connection with the church is a Mission Room, in which service is held every Sunday evening.

The United Methodist Free Church, erected in 1864, is a plain brick building, with pointed windows. Adjoining is a school, built in 1885, at a cost of £400, to accommodate 300. The Primitive Methodist have a chapel in the village; and the United Free Church have a chapel at Pinxton Wharf. This is a large and imposing structure, of stone dressings. The interior is furnished throughout with wood, to accommodate 800, while 400 scholars attend the Sunday school.

A School Board of five members was formed in 1876, and the school was taken over by the Board on lease, and subsequently enlarged. There are three departments (boys', girls', and infants), and accommodation for 410 children. There is also a junior school at Pinxton Wharf for infants and children in the first standard.

Brookhill Hall, the seat and residence of William Salmond, Esq., J.P., D.L., is situated in a small but well-wooded park, at the hamshire border. The home of the early lords of the manor, the churchyard, and traces of the walls still remained when this church in 1710. He records a tradition, which still lives, that Sir Hugh Pinkinson was once the lord of the manor; that it belonged to the family of Clifford; and that here was born Fair Rosamund, the Bower story, who afterwards made some atonement for her sins in a convent of nuns.

Longwood Hall, the residence of W. Salmond, Esq., J.P., is a large house, standing within its own well-arranged grounds.

SHIRLAND.

This parish consists of the township of Shirland and Higham, containing 2,946 acres. It is in the hundred of Scarsdale; electoral division of Shirland; poor-law union of Chesterfield; and petty sessional division, county court district, and rural deanery of Alfreton. The total ratable value is £14,248, and the population in 1891 was 3,694. W. G. Turbutt, Esq., Ogston Hall, is lord of the manor and principal landowner; and J. T. Leather, Esq., Middleton Hall, Northumberland; Charles Rd. Palmer Morewood, Esq., Alfreton Hall; and Hardstaff's Exors have land in the parish. The surface is undulated, and the soil varies from light on the higher grounds to strong clay in the valleys, and rests on ratchell and clay. A small portion is sown with wheat and oats, but the greater part is in pasture. Camomile was formerly cultivated to a considerable extent. Coal is abundant, and is extensively worked by the Blackwell Colliery Co., Ltd., who have here two collieries in operation. Shirland Colliery, commenced in 1864, gives employment to about 500 hands, and the Alfreton pit about 560.

The Manor of Shirland, at the time of the Domesday Survey, belonged to William Peveril, under whom it was held by one Warner. This manor, with other five, was subsequently granted by King John to Henry de Grey, of Turroc in Essex. Sir Henry married Isolda, a coheiress of Robert Bardolf, by whom he obtained many other lands in Derbyshire; and from their six sons have descended the several branches of that noble family. The second son, John, received Shirland estate, and settled here; but his descendants afterwards adopted Wilton for their principal residence, and were thenceforth known as the Greys de Wilton. The manor remained with this family till the reign of Edward IV. (1461-1483), when it was purchased by the Earl of Shrewsbury. After the death of Gilbert, seventh earl, in the early part of the 17th century, the manor was divided amongst his three daughters, and these shares have since passed through various hands. Mr. Turbutt owns a third and a sixth, and the freeholders claim the manorial rights of their own lands. The Greys had a park here, and probably a mansion also; not a vestige of the latter remains, but a few farms still bear the name of Shirland Park.

The village of Shirland, large and irregularly built, stands on the Chesterfield road, two miles N. by W. from Alfreton, 15 N.E. from Derby, and $1\frac{1}{2}$ miles from Doe Hill station on the Midland railway. The church, dedicated to St.

Leonard, is a handsome edifice of stone, in the Perpendicular style of the 15th century, but there are a few traces of an earlier edifice. The plan comprises chancel, nave, side aisles, south porch, and western tower surmounted by an embattled parapet with four crocketed pinnacles. The parapets of the nave and aisles are also embattled. Above the eastern gable of the nave is a small turret, pierced for two bells, and over the entrance of the porch is a plain square niche where once stood the statue of the patron saint. The windows are all square-headed, except the east window of the chancel, which is a very depressed curve. It consists of three principal lights—the central one filled with stained glass in memory of the Rev. Joseph Hall, late rector of the parish, who died in 1882. There are stained-glass windows in the south wall, but neither sedilia nor piscina. In the north wall is a recess under an ogee-shaped arch, ornamented with crockets and finials. Beneath is a tomb, the front of which is alabaster, bearing twenty-one shields of arms, amongst which are several of the Grey family. On the top formerly lay the mutilated effigy of a knight in plate armour. It is supposed to be the tomb of Sir Henry Grey de Shirland, who was summoned to Parliament as a baron in 1377, and died in 1396. On the opposite wall is another ancient monument—an alabaster slab, on which are four kneeling figures, two women and two men, carried in relief. This monument, which was originally on the north wall, bears neither inscription nor armorial device, but is generally supposed to commemorate some members of the Grey family. Under this is an oak reading-desk bearing a copy of Jewell's Apology, dated 1609, attached by its original chain fastening.

The nave is separated from the aisle on either side by three pointed arches, resting on eight-sided columns. Above, in the clerestory on each side, are three square-headed windows, in which a few fragments of ancient glass have been preserved. Under the east window of the north aisle is a large table-tomb of alabaster. On the top are the full-length incised figures of a man and wife, with their eight children—three sons and five daughters—at their feet. The inscription round the margin shows that it is the tomb of John Revell, who died in 1537, and Margaret, his wife, and ends with a propitiatory prayer. The Revells settled at Ogston, in the neighbouring township, in the 14th century. They also possessed land at Higham in this parish, where a branch of the family was resident. Thomas Revell, of Higham, in 1474, founded a chantry in this church, and it was further endowed by other members of the family. This chantry was at the east end of the north aisle, and the above table-tomb occupies the site of the altar. The last heir male of this branch of the Revells died in 1706, leaving two sisters, coheirs, one of whom married Richard Turbutt, Esq. There are several modern tablets in the church to members of the families of Barlow, Burnham, Boot, Hopkinson, Williamson, Siddall, Clay, Oldham, and Laverack.

The tower opens into the nave by a lofty arch, occupied by the organ gallery, which will, however, shortly be removed. The belfry contains five bells, one of which bears the legend, "Sancti Johes, ora pro nobis" (St. John, pray for us), which clearly shows that it dates from old Catholic days. A new clock was placed in the tower, at a cost of £110, raised chiefly by the exertions of the present rector; and a new organ was erected in 1887, at a cost of £200. The church was restored, re-roofed, and re-seated in 1848, at an expense of £1,000, raised by subscription and a rate. The registers date from 1650.

The living is a rectory, in the gift of five trustees, net value £210, derived from 60 acres of glebe and tithe rent charge, and held since 1889 by the Rev. Robert Baker Stoney, M.A., Trinity College, Dublin. The rectory house is a commodious residence, covered with ivy and surrounded by neatly planted grounds. The hall and corridor are wainscotted with fine old oak from the church, bearing the date 1664.

There are two chapels in the village, belonging to the Primitive Methodists and the United Methodist Free Church. The National School, erected in 1851, has been transferred to the School Board, who have expended about £1,000 upon it. There is an average attendance of 116.

Higham is a hamlet and village, situated on an eminence on the Derby and Chesterfield road, $15\frac{1}{2}$ miles from the former, $7\frac{1}{4}$ from the latter, and three-quarters of a mile from Shirland. The Downmans had an estate here, which passed by marriage to the Revells in the 15th century. Higham was evidently a place of considerable importance at an early date, for John de Grey, in 1250, obtained a grant of a market to be held here on Wednesdays, and a fair for three days at the festival of St. Peter ad Vincula (August 1st). The market was discontinued about a century ago, but the old market cross, restored in 1856, still stands in the village. A Fair for cattle and sheep is held on the first Wednesday after New Year's Day, and the Feast is held on the Sundays nearest to the festival of St. James.

A Methodist chapel was erected here by John Smedley, Esq., of Riber Castle, in 1852; adjoining is a school, built by the same gentleman, and now rented by the School Board. New Higham is a small village on the Chesterfield road, nearer Shirland, that has sprung into existence within the last twenty years. The School Board are erecting a school and master's residence here, at an estimated cost of £2,600.

Hallfield Gate is a hamlet about half-a-mile W. from Shirland. A school was erected here in 1637 by the parishioners, on a site given by Edward Revell, Esq., and subsequently endowed by various persons. The premises were rebuilt in 1830, and considerable alterations were made in 1853. It was further enlarged in 1876 by the late W. Turbutt, Esq. It was placed under Government as a Church voluntary school on the 1st January, 1893, and, to raise the funds necessary to effect the structural alteration required by the Educational Department, some of the minerals under a portion of the charity land were sold by the trustees for between £300 and £400. The income from the endowment is about £30 a year. The average attendance of scholars for last year was 79.

Stonebroom is a considerable village near Doe Hill station, on the Midland railway. It is a typical colliery village, and has sprung into existence in recent years. Bagshaw's directory, published in 1846, does not mention this place; and White's, 1857, only gives the names of four farmers. A handsome Board School was erected here in 1874, for the accommodation of about 500. The United Methodist Free Church is a commodious structure, built in 1867 at a cost of £900. Beneath is a schoolroom, and behind another schoolroom and vestry. Several alterations and additions were made in 1885, and an organ placed in the chapel at a cost of £182. The Primitive Methodist Chapel, a large structure of brick, was erected in 1867, at a cost of about £1,000. It is comfortably furnished with open seats of pitchpine to accommodate 400. Church services are held in a corrugated iron building, which will be replaced by a permanent structure when the necessary funds have been obtained. The Rev. J. Warwick Adams is the curate-in-charge.

Toad Hole Furnace, sometimes called Furnace and sometimes Amber Mills, is situated near the river Amber, about one mile S. of Higham. The Hopkinsons were long identified with this place, and at one time owned the manorial rights. They belonged to the Society of Friends, and the present Meeting House was erected by the late Matthew Hopkinson in 1743. There was formerly a mustard mill here, but the manufacture was discontinued about 20 years ago. Part of the village of Stretton is in the parish of Shirland. Some of the farms here are praiseworthy patterns of neatness and order. Mr. A. Milner is in possession of seven cups awarded to him by local agricultural societies for the best kept farm.

Post, Money Order, Savings Bank, Insurance and Annuity Office, at Robert Mason's. Letters, via Alfreton, arrive at 7-0 a.m., daily, and are despatched at 6-0 p.m. on week days, and at 10-30 a.m. on Sundays. Higham (one mile distant) is the nearest Telegraph Office.

SOUTH NORMANTON.

This parish contains 1,934 acres of land, lying on the border of Nottinghamshire, belonging chiefly to Vaughan Hobbs Radford, Esq., Carnfield Hall, and the Rev. Edward Evans, of Preston, Ledbury, Gloucestershire. There are also several small proprietors. Each freeholder owns the manorial rights of his own land.

The ratable value is £15,171, and the population in 1891 was 4,192. South Normanton is in the hundred of Scarsdale; petty sessional division, county court district, and deanery of Alfreton; county council electoral division of Blackwell; and poor law union of Mansfield. In order to carry out the provisions of the Local Government Act of 1894, a parish council of ten members has been assigned to it, and two guardians and district councillors. The surface is undulated, and some lovely views are obtained from the higher points. The soil is chiefly of a clayey nature, and rests upon clay; there is some good wheat growing land, but almost all the land is now laid down in grass. Coal is abundant, and is extensively worked by the South Normanton Colliery Company, Limited, and the Blackwell Colliery Company, Limited.

The manor of South Normanton, at the time of the Domesday Survey, was held by Edwin, under William Peveril. A little later it belonged to the family of De Alfreton, one of whom granted it, together with Pinxton, to Ralph de Poer. The heiress of this family conveyed it to the Le Wynes; and William le Wyne, in 1342, sold South Normanton and Pinxton to Sir Alured de Solney. A later Solney left two daughters, coheiresses; one of whom married Sir Thomas Stafford and the other Sir Nicholas Longford, who held the manor in moieties. The Staffords sold their share to Sir William Babington, of Chilwell; and thence it descended to the Sheffields, by whom it was sold to the Revells. The other moiety remained with the Longfords till 1576, when it was purchased by one of the Cokes. Subsequently these moieties were further divided, and now each freeholder claims the manorial rights of his own land.

The village is of considerable extent, consisting of one very long street and several smaller ones, $2\frac{1}{4}$ miles E.N.E. from Alfreton, 18 miles N. by E. from Derby, and $1\frac{1}{2}$ miles from Alfreton and South Normanton station on the Midland railway. A great deal of new property has been erected in late years, but several picturesque old cottages still remain. Many of the colliers own the houses in which they reside. One part of the main street is called the Market Place, and here a market is held every Saturday.

The church of St. Michael is a handsome and imposing edifice, originally erected in Norman times, but subsequently altered when the Decorated Gothic style prevailed in the 14th century, and again in the Perpendicular period, when the tower was built. It was thoroughly re-seated and enlarged by the addition of a south aisle, organ chamber, and vestry, in 1877-8, at a cost of £2,500. The chancel is separated from the nave by a lofty pointed arch, and a neat wooden screen. The east window, a good example of the Perpendicular style, is a memorial of Elizabeth Sampson, who died in 1882. The north aisle is continued along the side of the chancel, from which it is entered by an archway; and two pointed arches divide it from the aisle. Against the east wall is a massive marble monument with the sculptured figure of a weeping child at each side, and a long Latin inscription to the memory of Robert Revel, who died in 1714, and Ann his wife, daughter of Robert Wilmot, of Osmaston. There are also here on the walls monuments of Francis Revel (dated 1681), the Wilsons, and the Radfords, successive owners of Carnfield Hall in this parish. Of ancient memorials we noticed only one—a slab bearing an incised cross, now in the floor of the porch. The tower is supported by diagonal buttresses, and surmounted by an embattled parapet with a crocketed pinnacle at each corner. There are five bells, the two oldest being of 17th century date. One of these is inscribed: "George Dobb, of Normanton, gave this bell for to be rung, 1654." The communion plate is good and massive, and was given by the above Robert and Ann Revel, in 1713. The registers begin in 1540. The living is a rectory, in the patronage of the representatives of the late Rev. John Bird, and held by the Rev. John Henry Lewis, B.A. (St. David's, Lampeter.) The gross yearly value is £350, including 30 acres of glebe land, with residence.

Nonconformity is well represented by chapels in the village. First amongst them for architectural effect is Zion Chapel, belonging to the Primitive Methodists, built in 1881, at a cost of £1,100. It is a handsome brick structure, with stone dressings, in the Gothic style. The entrance is surmounted by a tower, from one corner of which rises a spiret. The interior is well lighted and comfortably furnished. The old chapel previously used has been converted into a Working Men's Conservative Club. The Free Church Methodists have two chapels in South Normanton; one in Alfreton Road is a commodious structure erected in 1879, at a cost of £800, exclusive of the purchase of site. The other, Bethel Chapel, is in Victoria Street, and was built in 1886 at a cost of £600. Sunday schools for the accommodation of 350 children were built in 1888-9, at an expense of £400. The Wesleyan Chapel, in High Street, is a handsome structure of brick, with stone dressings, built in 1887, at a cost of £710. The interior is well lighted with pointed windows and a rose window in the gable, the latter being crowned by a stone bearing a cross carved in relief and surmounted by the monogram I.H.S. There is a small tower, through which is the entrance. The first Wesleyan chapel was erected here in 1800. This was superseded by one built in 1845, and now used as a Sunday school.

Scholastic affairs are managed by a School Board of seven members, by whom good school premises have been erected. The boys' school, recently built at a cost of £3,800, is a handsome block, well lighted and ventilated, and possessing every convenience. There are also schools for girls, junior girls and infants; and the Board also make use of St. Mark's Mission Room as an infant school.

The Wakes or Feast is held on the Sunday preceding the 29th of September.

WINGFIELD,

Or WINGFIELD SOUTH, is a parish and township, co belonging chiefly to Halton's Exors.; F. N. Smith, Esq., Mr. John Pearson, South Wingfield; and Mr. E. R. Leacrof way Company own the land occupied by that portion of the parish. The total ratable value is £10,834, and the p 1,319. The soil is a strong clay resting on a clay subsoil. grass, and great numbers of cattle are bred. There were fo in the parish, but the workable coal is exhausted and mini South Wingfield is in the Scarsdale hundred; the elect the poor-law union of Belper; and the county court di division and rural deanery of Alfreton.

The earliest notice of this place occurs in Domesday B is written Winefeld and Winnefelt, and in the first divisi the Conqueror this manor was allotted to Roger de Poiete baron, whose grant included the whole of Lancashire and Cheshire. Roger shortly afterwards forfeited his vast p loyalty, and Winefeld, at the time of the Domesday Surve Peverel, illegitimate son of the Conqueror, under whom it of Brittany; and from the latter it was held by one Robert. The next owners bore the surname of Heriz, and are supposed to have been the descendants of the above Robert. In the reign of Henry VI., Ralph, Lord Cromwell, and Sir Henry Pierrepont, each claimed the manor by right of inheritance. A lengthy lawsuit followed, and ended in a compromise, the former receiving Wingfield, and the latter Tibshelf and two manors in Nottinghamshire. Cromwell was a man of considerable importance, and held the lucrative office of Treasurer of the Exchequer under Henry VI. He built the Manor House and restored and enlarged the church. He afterwards sold the manor to John Talbot, Earl of Shrewsbury; and it remained in the possession of the successive earls till 1616, when, on the decease of Gilbert, seventh earl, it became the property of the Earl of Pembroke, the Earl of Kent, and the Earl of Arundel and Surrey, who had married the three daughters and coheirresses of Earl Gilbert. In 1678 Mr. Immanuel Halton, then resident at the Manor House, purchased a third share, and the other two shares were subsequently sold in parcels. Each landowner claims the manorial rights of his own property.

The Manor House, now in ruins, is perhaps one of the richest existing specimens of the domestic architecture of the 15th century—that period of transition from irregular and massive castle piles to the lighter and more elegant quadrangular palaces that succeeded them. Camden gives the year of its erection as 1440, and the stone carvings, representing purses or money-bags, over the gateway, clearly point to Lord Treasurer Cromwell as the founder. It stands on the brow of a hill commanding many beautiful prospects, and was well placed for defence. Its ground plan is a quadrangle, divided into an outer and inner court, around which the buildings are ranged. Judging from the ruins as they now stand, the house, when in its original entirety, must have been a stately building. The great hall, 72 feet by 36 feet, has been a magnificent apartment. It was lighted by a richly-decorated bay window and three square-headed ones on the south side, and five windows on the north, but the mullions and tracery are gone. Beneath the great hall is an apartment of the same dimensions, with a groined roof, supported by a double row of massive octagon pillars, and scantily lighted by small windows on one side. The original purpose of this crypt-like room has not been satisfactorily ascertained. The grand saloon, or state apartment, reached by a flight of stairs, still bears traces of its former grandeur. At the south end is a beautiful Gothic window. In the corner of the quadrangle, adjoining these, is a massive and lofty tower, with dungeon cells within the thickness of the walls.

Many interesting historical associations cluster round these ruined walls. Here the beautiful but much persecuted Queen of Scots spent a portion of the unjust captivity which culminated, after 19 years, in the tragedy of Fotheringhay—an everlasting stain on the name of a sister Queen and near relative, from whom she sought protection against her fanatical foes in her own country. Her custodian at Wingfield was the Earl of Shrewsbury, husband of the famous Bess of Hardwick, and the suite of apartments she occupied lay, according to tradition, on the west side of the inner court. She is said to have spent nine years of her imprisonment here; and whilst here, Leonard Dacre made his abortive attempt to rescue her in 1569.

During the war between Charles I. and the Parliament the Manor House was garrisoned by the Roundheads, but the Earl of Newcastle, with a party of Royalists, swooped down upon it and captured it, whence for several months they made raids and sorties into the adjoining counties. To stop this annoyance, a Parliamentary force under Sir John Gell of Hopton and Lord Grey of Groby beleaguered the house and cut off the supply of water; but a deep well was sunk in the courtyard which gave them a copious supply. The besiegers' guns were placed on Pentrich Common, whence they assaulted the east side, but little or no effect was produced. The cannon were then removed to a wood on the opposite side, and here the firing proved more effectual. A breach was soon made in the walls, and the garrison were compelled to surrender. Colonel Dalby, the governor, was killed in the siege. He had disguised himself as a common soldier, but was seen and recognised by a deserter, who, pointing his musket through a small hole in the wall near the porter's lodge, shot him in the face as he was walking in one of the stables. By a decree of the Parliament, the house was dismantled in 1646. Soon after this it became the property and residence of the Haltons, one of whom, about 120 years ago, pulled down and unroofed part of the fine old structure to build himself a mansion in the valley below.

The village stands on high ground, above the valley of the river Amber, 2½ miles from Alfreton and about half-a-mile from Wingfield station on the Midland railway. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is in the hamlet of Oakerthorpe, and consists of chancel, nave (with north and south aisles), south porch, and an embattled tower containing six bells. The nave and aisles were rebuilt in 1803, but the Gothic arcades on each side were retained. The tower and chancel are also portions of the former edifice; the roof of the latter has been lowered, and the windows converted into square-headed ones. In the south wall is a handsome piscina; on the opposite side is an aumbry recess; and on the walls are several monuments to members of the Halton and other families. Suspended from a beam in the south-west corner is a funeral garland—a relic of an old-time custom now extinct. These garlands were carried before the funeral procession of maidens, and after the interment suspended in the church. This garland was carried at the funeral of Miss Kendall, of the Peacock Hotel, who died in 1745. She was courted by a young farmer of the parish. She, however, "loved not wisely but too well;" and her seducer, refusing to marry her, the disgrace so preyed upon her mind that she died broken-hearted. The nave is lighted by circular-headed clerestory windows, and there are windows of the same kind in the aisles, which betray an utter want of architectural taste in the rebuilders of 1803. The tower is Perpendicular Gothic, and has a fine west window of that style. The chancel was restored in 1877, and the nave in 1885. Both are fitted with pitchpine benches, to accommodate 300. In the churchyard is a slab bearing the full length effigy of a knight carved in high relief. The legs have been crossed about the knee, but the lower parts are broken off. Near this is a coped-stone coffin lid, but neither memorial bears any inscription. The living is a vicarage, net value £200 per annum, with residence, in the gift of the Duke of Devonshire, and held by the Rev. Frederick White Christian, M.A., Trinity Hall, Cambridge.

The other religious edifices are the Wesleyan Chapel and the United Methodist Free Church. The former is a plain, freestone building, erected in 1811; and the latter, a more ornate structure, erected in 1862, at a cost of £300. The east window, representing the Good Shepherd, is a memorial of Mr. Samuel Hunt and Bridget his wife. The Baptists have a chapel at Birches Lane, a small village inhabited chiefly by colliers; and the Primitive Methodists have one in the hamlet of Moorwood Moor.

The Board School is a neat Gothic building, erected in 1875. There are two departments, mixed and infants, with total accommodation for 265. The old Free School is now used as a Working Men's Club and Institute.

Wingfield Park is a small hamlet delightfully situated in a valley about one mile from South Wingfield. Here are a cotton doubling or lace thread mill, and a bobbin manufactory; and on the acclivity a burial ground, belonging to F. N. Smith, Esq., J.P.

Oakerthorpe, a hamlet and separate manor included in this township, belongs chiefly to R. C. Strelley, Esq. The Duke of Devonshire, and Mr. Morewood, of Alfreton, have also some land here. The soil is a stiff clay, and the subsoil clay. The land is chiefly in pasture, and a good many cattle are bred. Coal is worked to a small extent by the Oakerthorpe Colliery Company. The church and railway station are in this hamlet.

The Manor of Oakerthorpe was held at the time of the Domesday Survey by Ralph Fitzhubert; the next recorded owner was Ralph Fitzstephen, chamberlain to King Henry II., by whom it was given to Darley Abbey. Holly Bank, the residence of Mr. R. C. Strelley, lord of the manor, was erected by an ancestor of the present owner in 1655, and has since been enlarged.

Oakerthorpe village consists of a number of scattered houses about $1\frac{1}{2}$ miles W. from Alfreton, and half-a-mile E. from South Wingfield. Here is the Peacock Inn, a famous hostelry in the old coaching days, when letters for Alfreton and the neighbourhood were addressed—"Alfreton, &c., near the Peacock." The cellars are cut out of the solid rock and roofed over with brick. Here, or close by, stood the manor house of the early lords of Wingfield, previous to the erection of South Wingfield Manor by Lord Cromwell; and here also was the chapel of Linbury, erected by John Heriz for the use of the family and household. A cottage now occupies the site, and under the stables is a vaulted apartment supposed to have been the crypt. Highfield Cottages is a hamlet in this township.

CHARITIES.—Phillip Strelley, goldsmith and citizen of London, by will dated 1603, left £20 yearly for ever to be paid out of the rents of his land in Oakerthorpe for apprenticing two poor children yearly; also £10 yearly for seven years, and so from seven years to seven years for ever, to two poor scholars in Cambridge and Oxford that shall make suit for the same, but natives and residents of Oakerthorpe to be preferred, and for want of such then to poor men's sons of his own name and kindred. Fras. Hardy by will in 1669, left 5s. yearly for ever to the poor of South Wingfield. Samuel Newton, Esq., of the Isle of Barbadoes, by will dated 1683, left £200 in money for the purchase of land, the yearly revenue thereof to be distributed and bestowed by the vicar, churchwardens and overseers of the poor of the parish of South Wingfield for ever.

TIBSHELF.

This is a rapidly improving parish on the Nottinghamshire border, containing 2,371 acres and 2,679 inhabitants, in the hundred of Scarsdale; petty sessional division, county court district, and deanery of Alfreton; Mansfield union, and Blackwell rural district. The parish is intersected by the Manchester, Sheffield, and Lincolnshire railway, and by two branch lines of the Midland system, the Erewash Valley and the Teversall. The first mentioned line passes through the village, where there is a station opened for passenger traffic in January, 1893; and there are stations convenient for the village on the Midland lines at Doe Hill and Newton road. The manorial rights and most of the land belong to St. Thomas' Hospital, London; the following also are landowners:—The Duke of Devonshire, Edward A. Storer, Esq., Nether Moor House; John E. F. Chambers, Esq., J.P., The Hurst; John Stephen Sampson, Esq., The Cedars; and R. S. Sitwell, Esq., Stainsby House, Derby.

At the time of the Domesday Survey the manor of Tibecal (Tibshelf) was held under the King by William Peverel. The next recorded owners were the Heriz family, in whose possession it was from the time of King John until the latter half of the fourteenth century, when it passed by marriage to Roger Belers; and a Belers heiress conveyed it to Robert de Swyllinton, who died in 1429. The prioress and nuns of Brewood owned a considerable portion of land in Tibshelf, by grant from one of the Heriz family; and, in 1552, Edward VI. gave the manor and the land that had belonged to the priory to St. Thomas' Hospital, London, which he had founded.

The village is situated on the Alfreton and Chesterfield road, four miles from the former and eight miles from the latter. It formerly consisted of one long street, but during the last few years many streets of houses have been erected, and sites laid out for building purposes, and there is every probability that Tibshelf will continue to increase in size and importance as time passes. The church, dedicated to St. John the Baptist, is a plain stone structure consisting of chancel, nave, north aisle, with porch, and embattled tower, containing five bells. With the exception of the tower and part of the chancel, the church was rebuilt in 1729. The archway separating the chancel from the nave is pointed and very lofty, reaching almost to the apex of the roof, and another fine archway opens from the tower into the nave, but this is blocked up by a gallery. The walls and ceiling are whitewashed, and the interior altogether presents a bald and undignified appearance. The east window is square-headed, of three lights, with cinquefoil heads, filled with stained glass, and there are two windows of the same style on the south side. The tower is a good example of the Perpendicular style which prevailed in the fifteenth century. The font is a very handsome one, of marble, inscribed, "To the Glory of God, Amen. In memory of Deborah Chambers, and in fulfilment of her own pious intentions, this font is erected by her afflicted parents. Born January 1st, 1838; died August 28th, 1867." There are no monuments possessing any particular interest.

The church of Tibshelf was given to the convent of Brewood by one of the Heriz family, and in 1319 the rectorial tithes were appropriated to the same house, and the living thenceforth became a vicarage. After the Reformation the tithes were purchased by Thomas Wrenne and Edward Slegge; they were afterwards transferred to St. Thomas's Hospital, and subsequently sold to the landowners. The living is now worth £144, with residence, in the gift of the trustees of the late Mrs. Packman, and held by the Rev. A. E. Morgan, B.A.

The Wesleyan Chapel is a neat building of brick, erected in 1863, and comfortably furnished with open seats of pitchpine to accommodate 250. A commodious Sunday school was built in 1891. The United Methodist Free Church, erected in 1884, is a small plain structure, capable of seating 150. The Primitive Methodist Chapel was built in 1878, at a cost of £830, including later additions.

The National School is a neat building of brick, the property of St. Thomas's Hospital, London, by whom it was erected as a substitute for the original parish school, which stood by the roadside. It has accommodation for 200 children, and is now under the management of the Babington Coal Co. Handsome schools were built by the Tibshelf Colliery Company in 1873 for boys and girls, and a school for infants was opened in 1889.

Tibshelf Colliery Workman's Club was built in 1874, at a cost of £2,000, and subsequently further enlarged at a further expense of £2,000. The premises comprise a card room, sitting room, and steward's apartments on the right hand side of entrance, and on the left side billiard and card rooms. On the upper floor are a reading room and library and smoke room. Adjoining the building, on the right, are a verandah with glass roof and a conservatory, and on the left is a wing, used at present as a select billiard room.

Coal is extensively worked in the parish, and bricks are made from the surface clay. Several small villages have been erected for the accommodation of the colliers.

TURNDITCH.

This is a parish and township containing 811 acres of land, occupying the lower ground and sloping side of a valley through which flows the Ecclesburne. The soil is strong, but lighter in the higher grounds, and is chiefly laid down in pasture. The total ratable value is £1,656, and the population in 1891 was 283. The principal landowners are Lord Scarsdale, Kedleston Hall; William Statham, Esq., Totteridge, London, N.; J. G. Crompton, Esq., Windley; Mr. Robt. Lomas, Hazelwood Hall; Mrs. Ann Milnes, Derby; and John Adsetts, Esq., Army and Navy Club, London. The parish is in the hundred of Appletree; electoral division of Duffield; petty sessional division, county court district, and poor law union of Belper; and rural deanery of Wirksworth.

The village of Turnditch is pleasantly situated on the Belper and Ashbourne Road, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles from the former place, and half-a-mile from Shottle station, on the Wirksworth branch of the Midland railway. It contains several good villa residences. The church, dedicated to All Saints, comprises chancel and nave, with western bell turret, containing one bell. It was formerly a chapelry under Duffield, but there is no record of its foundation. Above the south-east door is the date 1630, which probably refers to a restoration at that time. The church was restored, enlarged by the addition of a chancel, and refurnished in 1883, at a cost of £700, raised by subscription. The font is octagonal in shape, and evidently very ancient. There was no burial ground till 1846; and in 1890 additional ground was consecrated. The living is a vicarage, net value £92, with residence, in the gift of the vicar of Duffield, and held by the Rev. Francis Lambert Cursham, B.A., Cambridge. The income is derived from glebe land, grant from Queen Anne's Bounty, and interest of money invested with the Ecclesiastical Commissioners.

The Congregational Chapel, with Sunday school, was built in 1818 by Mr. Statham, of Green Bank, and Mr. Harrison, of Belper; and W. Statham, Esq., the present owner of Green Bank, contributes £12 15s. yearly towards its support. It is a brick building without any exterior embellishments, but the interior is well furnished with open pews of pitchpine, and the walls painted in imitation of stone work. There is a handsome marble tablet to the memory of W. Statham, who died in 1844. The Primitive Methodists have also a chapel in the village. The National School was built by subscription in 1846, and since enlarged by the addition of an infants' room. It is attended by 100 children.

Hill Cliff is a hamlet in this parish, containing several good villa residences.

CHARITIES.—John Walker, in 1691, amongst other bequests, left 20s. yearly to the poor of Turnditch, payable out of land now in the possession of Mr. W. Statham, of Green Bank. The poor also receive £6 10s., given in warm clothing, from the bequest of the Rev. F. Gisborne.

Post Office, at William Rodgers. Letters, via Derby, delivered from COWERS LANE. Despatch at 7 p.m. daily. The nearest Money Order Office is at Idridgehay (two miles distant), and Telegraph at Shottle Station (one mile distant).

WESSINGTON,

Or WASHINGTON parish was formed out of Crich in 1857, and comprises the whole of the township of its own name, containing 958 acres. Its ratable value is £1,917, and the population in 1891 was 610. The land belongs to several freeholders. The soil is various, chiefly clayey, with the subsoil clay and gravel, and is mostly in pasture. The parish is in the Morleston and Litchurch hundred; the electoral division of Crich; poor-law union of Chesterfield; petty sessional division, county court district, and rural deanery of Alfreton.

At the time of the Domesday Survey the manor of Wistanestun (Wessington) was held by Levine under Ralph Fitzhubert. About the middle of the 12th century it belonged in portions to Ralph Fitz Odo and Geoffrey de Constantine, who gave it to Darley Abbey. The monks had a grange here with a chapel attached to it. An old house near the Post Office is said to be part of the monastic buildings, but if such it be, it has lost all external evidence of its original purpose. After the dissolution of the abbey the manor was granted in 1544 to Thomas Babington, but was forfeited through the treason of Anthony Babington in the reign of Elizabeth. It was then granted to the Earl of Shrewsbury, and was sold by one of his descendants in 1657.

The village occupies an elevated situation, four miles N.W. from Alfreton, and two miles from Wingfield station on the Derby and Sheffield branch of the Midland railway. The houses are scattered round an extensive green or common, on which are several springs of water. One, which has been known as Moses (Moses's) Well for over 200 years, derives its supply from some inexhaustible source, and never ceases to yield even in the driest seasons. Coal was discovered here about twelve years ago, and during the late lock-out a few shafts were sunk on the common, and sufficient coal obtained to supply the needs of the inhabitants. Christ Church is a substantial stone edifice, built by subscription in 1857, and comprises chancel, nave, south porch, vestry, and western bell turret. There is accommodation for 200, and all seats are free in consequence of a grant of £120 from the Incorporated Society. Formerly those who attended evening service had to provide their own lamps, and traces of the pegs or nails on which they were suspended may still be seen in the walls. The living is a vicarage, gross yearly value £194, with residence, in the gift of the Vicar of Crich, and held since 1881 by the Rev. Joseph Mulkerns, B.D. (University of France).

The School was built by subscription in 1839, and was used for Divine service previous to the erection of the church. There is accommodation for 90 children, and an average attendance of 79. The Primitive Methodists have a chapel in the village, erected in 1849, at a cost of about £100, and will seat about 100. It is in the Alfreton circuit.

The river Amber forms the eastern boundary of the parish; and near it are two rows of houses, known as Amber Row and Amber Terrace. The Primitive Methodists have a small temporary chapel here.

Post Office, at C. Charles Smith's. Letters, via Alfreton, arrive at 7-40 a.m., and are despatched at 5 p.m. Nearest Money Order Office, South Wingfield (two miles distant). Nearest Telegraph Office, Higham (about three miles distant). Letter Box, Amber row, cleared at 3-30 p.m.

SOUTHERN PARLIAMENTARY DIVISION.

ALLESTREE.

Allestree is a parish and township containing 1,104 acres of land, belonging chiefly to William Gisborne, Esq., J.P. F. N. Mundy, Esq., Markeaton Hall, is lord of the manor, but does not own much land in the parish. The soil is of a strong nature near the Derwent, which river passes through the parish, but towards the west it is light and sandy, and is nearly all laid down in grass. The township is valued for rating purposes at £6,001, and had in 1891 a population of 240. It is in the Morleston and Litchurch hundred, electoral division of railsford, poor law union of Belper, petty sessional division and county court district of Derby, and rural deanery of Duffield.

Adelardestreu, of which the present name is a contraction, is entered in Domesday Book as a berewick or hamlet of Markeaton, and it has ever since been held conjointly with that manor. It was purchased, together with Markeaton and Mackworth, by an ancestor of the present owner, about the year 1516.

The estate included nearly the whole township, but a large portion was sold by the late F. N. C. Mundy, Esq., to Thomas Evans, Bache Thornhill, Esquires. The portions purchased by them were subsequently conveyed to William Evans, Esq. The late William Evans, his only son, represented South Derbyshire in Parliament from 1868 in the Liberal interest, and again sat from 1874 to 1880 on the redistribution of seats. He afterwards contested the election in opposition to Mr. Gladstone's Home Rule Bill, but was defeated. He was elected Mayor of Derby, and was for some time chairman of the Derby Board. He took an active interest in all local affairs, and was instrumental in rebuilding the Infirmary, towards which he gave £10,000. In 1887, Her Majesty, in memory of her jubilee, conferred a baronetcy on him, and on the return from London of Sir William and Lady Evans, they turned out en masse to welcome them home. Her ladyship was married to the Rev. Thomas Gisborne, of Yoxall Lodge, but there was no issue from the marriage, and on the death of the late baronet, in 1892, all the estates were left to Wm. Gisborne, Esq., the present owner. He has a commodious mansion of stone, surrounded by a well-wooded park.

The village stands on the Duffield road, two miles N. of Derby, the nearest railway station. The church, dedicated to St. John the Baptist, was rebuilt and enlarged in 1866-7, and now consists of chancel, north and south vestry, nave, north and south aisles, south porch, and a square tower containing three bells. The south aisle was added in 1867. The English tower was left intact, and the old south doorway and chancel were also retained. The south doorway is a very fine specimen of Norman work, with wheel, beakhead, and chevron ornamentation. The chancel is quaintly carved, supposed by some to represent the "sower of the seed." A piscina in the south wall of the chancel has been restored. A cross bearing an incised floriated cross, found in the north wall of the chancel, is under a founder's arch in the chancel. There are also in the chancel several mural monuments and slabs to the Mundy family, and there are some to the family of Evans, of Allestree Hall, Derby. Some of the windows are stained glass memorials, and one is a well-executed piece of work, in stone and marble. The church was erected in 1856, at a cost of £300, defrayed solely by the Mundy family. The registers date from 1596. Allestree was formerly a parsonage, but in 1868 it was gazetted a vicarage. It was held by Sir Wm. Gisborne, Esq., and held by the Rev. Austin West; net income, £100. In the churchyard is a white marble monument to the late Sir Wm. Evans.

There are about 14 acres of land situated in the township of Allestree, four cottages and gardens in Allestree, which belong to this township. It was the subject of a searching inquiry by the Commission of Enquiry, &c., in 1682, at Derby, when it was found that from time immemorial the rents had been always paid to the churchwardens for the repair of the church at Allestree; but about that time John Mundy, being then lord of the manor of Allestree, and a powerful man, took advantage of the then rebellious and distracted times, and said lands to attorne tenants to him, and received the rents of the church till the tyme of his death." It was decreed that John Mundy, as administrators of John Mundy, should, within six months, deliver up possession of the church lands now let for £48 yearly.

The Wesleyans and Primitive Methodists have chapels belonging to the former body erected in 1821 and rebuilt in 1871. There is a good National School here, built in 1871.

It comprises two departments (mixed and infants), with a total average attendance of 110.

ALVASTON AND BOULTON.

Alvaston and Boulton were amalgamated and constituted a civil parish in 1884, but they remain, as heretofore, distinct parishes for ecclesiastical purposes. The total extent of land under assessment is 2,100 acres; ratable value, £10,242; and the population, in 1891, was 3,390. It is in the hundred of Morleston and Litchurch, county council division of Alvaston, poor law union of Shardlow, petty sessional division, county court district, and rural deanery of Derby. The soil is various, gravel and strong land in some places, and clay in others. Wheat, oats, barley, turnips, and potatoes are the chief crops, but a considerable portion of the land is laid down in grass. The principal landowners are Sir V. Harpur Crewe, Bart., Calke Abbey; the Earl of Harrington, Elvaston Castle; Mr. Geo. Webb Smith, Alvaston; Mr. G. A. Byron; the Vicar of Alvaston in right of his church; and Mr. Philip William Hubbersty, Kirkstall Hall, Leicestershire.

The village of Alvaston is situated on the great south road, two miles S.E. from Derby, and is intermixed with Boulton. It is under the government of an urban district council of nine members, and elects two urban guardians.

The manor of Alewoldstune (Alvaston) was given by the Conqueror to Geoffrey Alselin. Subsequently it passed through various families by whom portions of land were alienated and given to the abbeys of Dale and Darley. After the dissolution of these monasteries the lands of the former were granted in 1547 to Henry Needham; and the land and tithes which had belonged to the latter were given by Queen Mary to the bailiffs and burgesses of the town of Derby. The Fraunceys of Stanton-by-Bridge and the Sacheverels had estates here, as also had the Allestrees a little later. The property of the last-named family descended by marriage to the Borrowes, by whom it was sold, in 1812, to John Elliott, Esq. The manor was purchased from this gentleman by the Earl of Harrington, from whom it has descended to the present Earl.

Alvaston was formerly a chapelry subject to St. Michael's, Derby, which church the inhabitants were, by agreement, bound to attend yearly on the Feast of Relics. The chaplain was appointed by the parishioners, and was allowed for his support the lesser tithes and oblations. In 1536 the £4 4s. In the 18th century it was augmented with (Bounty), which was laid out in the purchase of land; and a commons, in 1802, the curate was allotted 60 acres in lieu. The living is now a vicarage worth £172, with residence, of glebe, and held by the Rev. T. C. Hairs.

The old church stood till 1856, when it was taken (edifice erected on the site at a cost of £2,200. It is in the and consists of chancel, nave, north and south aisles, and wing two bells. The smaller one is inscribed "God save H other bears the legend "IN HONORE BEATE MARIE" and is evidently of pre-Reformation date.* The old 14th been rebuilt in the wall of the chancel, and here also are century monuments to the Allestrees and Borrows. There is a very fine specimen of wrought iron work, supposed to be by the celebrated artificer, Huntingdon Shaw. The register and the communion plate bears the date 1662. In the ancient sepulchral slabs that were found under the foundation which fell in 1775. The one bears an incised cross with a plain cross supposed to be Saxon work.

The National School, built by subscription in 1859, received from Gilbert's charity. The Wesleyans have a chapel in 1872.

Allenton is a compact little village of five or six streets years ago by Mr. Isaac Allen. There is a school here under the Alvaston and Boulton School Board. It is also used on Sundays.

Gilbert's Charity consists of lands and tenements left by one Gilbert for the repair of the chapel and the relief of the poor of Alvaston about £70 per annum, which is divided equally between the church, the BOULTON contains about 900 acres. The ratable value included with Alvaston. The manor of Boletune (Boulton Conqueror to Ralph Fitzhubert. Shortly afterwards it came of the Sacheverels, one of whom endowed the chapel with 12s. per annum. Sir V. Harpur Crewe, Bart., is the present but the Earl of Harrington claims the right of the Derwent well as Alvaston.

The village is confusedly intermixed with Alvaston.

The church, which is dedicated to St. Mary, was formerly to St. Peter's, Derby. In 1271, Sir Robert de Sacheverel parochial independence for the church of Boulton, founded claim was resisted by the abbot of Darley, rector of St. twelve freemen was empaneled to try the case. Sir Robert his claim in consideration of twenty marks to be paid to was further agreed that Sir Robert was to nominate the have for his support three oxgangs of land, nine sellions of the small tithes. These endowments were confiscated at Reformation, and granted to two laymen; and thenceforth and Alvaston were served by the same minister until 1884.

The church was enlarged and repaired in 1840, at a cost north aisle and vestry were added, and other alterations to £1,084. The edifice now consists of chancel, nave (with and south porch. The door within the porch is of Norman deeply-splayed window, belonging to the same period, &

*Since the above was written, W. Bradshaw, Esq., of Alvaston of six bells and a chiming clock to the church in memory of the late from the well known foundry of Messrs. Taylor & Co., Loughboro' the peal is about 60cwts. The clock was made by J. Smith & Son, of north aisle was added, and rebuilt in the vestry. In the pavement near the pulpit are several old encaustic tiles that were found during some alterations in 1840. The nave and aisle are fitted with open benches of pitchpine to accommodate 250, and the chancel with choir stalls. There were formerly a few alabaster sepulchral slabs in the church, but these were used at the restoration in 1871 in the construction of the present pulpit. The eagle lectern, a handsome piece of work in brass, is a memorial of Mr. William Burnside. On the wall of the nave is a brass to the memory of the late Rev. Richard Poole, 49 years vicar of Boulton and Alvaston, who died in 1884. The living is a vicarage in the gift of Mrs. Blews Robotham, worth £160 per annum, derived chiefly from 67 acres of glebe, and held by the Rev. William Lilley. The great and small tithes were redeemed by allotments of land, awarded in lieu thereof at the enclosure of the common in 1802.

Newtown is a rising village which has sprung into existence during the past few years. A Mission Hall or Church has been erected by Mrs. Blews Robotham, at a cost of £1,200, to accommodate 250 persons. The font is the old Norman one that formerly stood in the porch of Boulton Church. There are also chapels belonging to the Congregationalists and the Methodist New Connexion. A Board School was built in 1890, at a cost of £2,690. There are two departments, mixed and infants, having a total accommodation for 300 children.

APPLEBY.

This is an extensive parish, situated partly in a detached portion of Derbyshire and partly in Leicestershire. Its total extent is 2,853 acres, of which 1,054 acres are in this county, and the population resident within the Derby portion numbers 386. It is in the hundred of Repton and Gresley, petty sessional division of Swadlincote, and county court district and union of Ashby-de-la-Zouch. G. J. Moore, Esq., and Mould's Exors., are the principal landowners, and the former is also lord of the manor.

The village is pleasantly situated on the border line, and is partly in both counties, $5\frac{1}{4}$ miles S.W. from Ashby-de-la-Zouch, 10 miles S.E. from Burton-on-Trent, and two miles from Measham station on the Ashby and Nuneaton branch of the Midland and London and North-Western joint railway. The church, dedicated to St. Michael, stands in the Leicestershire portion of the village. It is a large, ancient edifice of stone, consisting of chancel, nave, north and south aisles, and west tower surmounted by a spire. In 1830 the whole fabric underwent a thorough restoration at an expense of £5,000, towards which the sum of £1,000 had been left by Mrs. John Moore; and the chancel was restored at the expense of the rector. All the windows are adorned with stained glass. The east window is a large and handsome one of five lights, inscribed: "To the glory of God, and in affectionate remembrance of George Moore, who died August 26th, 1871, and Isabel Clara, his wife, who died January 27th, 1867." A three-light window, in the south wall of the chancel, is a memorial to the Rev. John M. Echallaz, M.A., rector of the parish for 46 years, and died in 1877. Another three-light window in the same wall commemorates the children of the Rev. J.

M. Echalaz and Charlotte, his wife. On the north side of the chancel, and opening into it by three pointed arches, is a chapel or transept, forming an organ chamber and vestry. Near one of the arches is an altar tomb, bearing the effigies of a knight and his lady, supposed to represent Sir Edmund de Appleby and his wife, who flourished in the reign of Edward III. He is in armour, with his helmet beneath his head and a lion at his feet. The monument has been seriously disfigured by the village vandals and others, who, to perpetuate their ignoble memories, have cut their names wherever they could find sufficient space for the purpose. The Applebys were lords of the manor and owners of the estate, which remained in their possession till 1636, when it was purchased by Sir Wolstan Dixie and given to Bosworth Grammar School. The aisles are separated from the nave by five pointed arches. In the south wall is a three-light window representing Christ blessing little children, inscribed: "To the glory of God, and in memory of the Rev. William Simpson Bamber, M.A., head-master of Appleby Grammar School from April, 1873, to his death in June, 1891." A modern gallery, extending across the west end of the church, blocks up three windows in each aisle, and detracts much from the beauty of the interior. Numerous mural tablets adorn the walls. The tower contains a peal of six bells.

A Grammar School was founded here in 1697, and endowed by Sir John Moore, Knt., Lord Mayor of London in 1681, and a munificent benefactor to Christ's Hospital and other institutions in London. The building was designed by Sir Christopher Wren, and completed in 1702; and was restored and considerably improved in 1884. In the centre of the building is a fine large schoolroom, with dormitories above for boarders; on the right is a commodious house for the head master. There is good classroom accommodation, with chemical laboratory, workshop, large dining hall, and nearly two acres of green in front of the school for cricket and football. The school bell is dated 1585, and was made by the Oldfields—a firm of Nottingham bell founders. The school register dates from 1702, and contains the names of many generations of neighbouring gentry. The present head master is the Rev. C. G. Duffield, M.A. (Cambridge.)

Appleby Hall, the seat of G. J. Moore, Esq., is a large modern mansion, half-a-mile south of the church, in Leicestershire. The family is said to be descended from the Lancashire family of the same name, and has been seated here since 1599, when the manor of Appleby Parva (the Leicester portion of the parish) was purchased from Sir Edward Griffin, Knt. Moat House, now a farmhouse, was for many generations the residence of the Applebys, early lords of the manor and owners of the estate.

CHARITIES.—Several small benefactions, amounting to £199 13s. 2d., have been left to the parish, and the interest is distributed yearly in bread and otherwise amongst the poor. The Rev. Abraham Mould, in 1683, gave a rent-charge of 25s. on certain lands in the parish, which is distributed in bread. The Misses Moore, in 1839, erected five cottages, with suitable buildings and gardens attached, for the purpose of being let for all future use at low rents to poor persons belonging to or residing in the parish of Appleby, being members of the Established Church. All rents so accruing to be applied solely to the repairs or improvement of the said cottages.

ASTON-ON-TRENT.

This parish embraces 1,793 acres of land, lying on the west bank of the Trent, which here divides Derbyshire from Nottinghamshire. The soil, rich and productive, rests on gravel, and a large portion is laid down in pasture; wheat, oats, barley, tares, and potatoes are also grown. Aston is in the hundred of Morleston and Litchurch; petty sessional division and county court district of Derby; union and rural district of Shardlow; and deanery of Melbourne. Edward Charles Shuttleworth Holden, Esq., is lord of the manor and principal landowner; the other proprietors are Edward Sutton, Esq., Market Deeping, Lincolnshire; the Earl of Harrington, Elvaston Castle; and Mrs. Sykes.

The manor of Aston, at the time of the Domesday Survey, was a subordinate manor or berewick to Weston, and was held of the King by the Earl of Chester who gave it to the Abbey of St. Werburgh, which he had founded at Chester. Aston appears to have soon attained some importance, and in 1256 the Abbot of Chester obtained the grant of a weekly market on Tuesday, and a fair of three days at the festival of St. Peter ad vincula (August 1st). The manor remained in the possession of the monks till the Reformation, when these and other lands which had belonged to the abbey were conferred on the new bishopric of Chester. They did not, however, remain long in episcopal hands, for by another grant Elizabeth transferred them to Henry Sacheverel; and James I., in the 1st year of his reign, gave them to Charles Paget, who shortly afterwards forfeited the estate by attainder. It was afterwards granted to the Ropers. The Hunts, formerly of Overton in Ashover, had an estate and were seated here about or before this time. John Hunt, in 1630, gave the communion table now in the church. Their capital messuage and lands were purchased by Robert Holden, who, in 1649, became possessed of the manor by purchase from the Ropers; and with this family it still remains. Robert Holden, who died in 1746, left a daughter and heiress, who married James Shuttleworth, Esq., of Gawthorpe, Lancashire, and their youngest son, on succeeding to this property, took the name and arms of Holden.

Aston Hall, the seat of E. C. S. Holden, Esq., is a modern mansion of brick, fronted on the north by a stone portico supported on two fluted columns. The grounds which surround the house are of considerable extent.

The village stands about a mile west of the Trent, six miles S.E. from Derby, and one mile from Weston-on-Trent station, on the Castle Donington branch of the Midland railway. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is an interesting old edifice, consisting of a spacious chancel, north and south aisles, north and south porches, and a west tower containing five bells. There is no record of its erection, but the lower stage of the tower, with its round-headed windows, is undoubted Norman work; and there is reason to believe that an earlier church occupied the site. The dedication—All Saints—is, according to Archdeacon of a Saxon foundation, and further evidence of its Saxon or the fragment of a churchyard cross with a reticulated pattern wall of the north aisle, the ornamentation of which is under the arches of the aisles are Early English, and the chancel is of the Decorated period. On the north side of the latter is a confessional forming a side chapel. The church was thoroughly restored in 1867, the galleries were removed, the arch and tower thrown open, and the windows with stained glass. A further restoration took place in 1867, the floor was relaid and several sepulchral slabs covered over. The ceiling is of encaustic tiles, the pattern of which—a floriated cross—is a reproduction of some old tiles found during the restoration. The communion table was presented by John Hunt, and bears his crest—the following inscription:—"Ex dono Johannis Hunte, 1630, and this is a neat reredos of Caen stone, divided into three panels, the central one represented the Crucifixion, with St. Peter and the keys of St. Paul on the left. The east window, of three lights, is a memorial to Anthony Holden, Esq., who died in 1877; and the stained glass in the north aisle commemorate several members of the same family. In the north aisle is an altar tomb of alabaster bearing the effigies of a man and a woman in hand. On the sides of the tomb are the figures of angels supporting the arms, but the persons commemorated have not been identified.

Though appropriated to the Abbey of St. Werburgh, the church is ordained, and the living remains a rectory, which is Ecclesiastical of Henry VIII. at £29 15s; present value, £400 of E. C. S. Holden, Esq., and held by the Rev. J. S. Holden.

The National School, with teacher's house, was erected in 1837 for accommodation for 154 children, and there are 109 in average attendance. Wesleyan Methodists have a small chapel in the village of Aston, market and fair have long been abandoned, but the market was revived in 1837, when it was removed. There are six almshouses bearing the date A.D. 1870, for aged and deserving persons who were bought, and four were erected by exchange of poor's houses left by the Rev. R. H. Murphy, for many years a faithful se of the parish. The occupants pay a nominal sum as rent.

A bed of gypsum or alabaster underlies a portion of the town. Pegg & Co., of Derby, have two quarries or mines, employing 100 men. The gypsum is manufactured into plaster of Paris.

BARROW-ON-TRENT.

parish comprises the townships of Barrow-on-Trent, Sinfen-with- and the township and chapelry of Twyford and Stenson. It is partly undred of Morleston and Litchurch, and partly in that of Appletree, division of Melbourne, petty sessional division and county court district, poor law union of Shardlow, and deanery of Melbourne.

township of Barrow comprises 1,130 acres of land, stretching along the nk of the Trent; ratable value, £2,852; and the population, in 1891, manor of Barrow (Barewe in Domesday Book) belonged, at the time of nan Survey, to Ralph Fitzhubert, who had here a church and a priest. shortly afterwards owned by a family named Bakepuze, one of whom, in of Henry II., gave the rectory, manor, and certain lands here to the of St. John of Jerusalem, or, as they were better known, Knights ers. After the dissolution of the Order at the Reformation, this reverted to the Crown, and a part of it was subsequently granted to Beaumont, Esq., but the larger part was bestowed on Sir Richard Chief Justice of the Common Pleas, from whom it has descended to Sir ewe, Bart., the present owner. Bakepuze's grant to the Hospitallers include the whole of Barrow; there were twelve oxgangs of land, as Domesday Book, that were in the soke of Melbourne. This portion art of the original endowment of the bishopric of Carlisle, and was heldokes under that see till 1704, when it was enfranchised by Act of nt. Subsequently it passed with the marriage of the sister and heiress Coke, Esq., to Sir Matthew Lamb, Bart., whose son was created Lord e, in 1770. This nobleman, about the beginning of the present century, property to Daniel Dalrymple, Esq., whose heiress married the Rev. s Vœux.

The principal landowners are Richard Sale, Esq., Barrow Hill; Sir Dalrymple Des Vœux, Bart., who is lord of the manor; Sir Vauncey Brewster, Bart., Calke Abbey; and James Eadie, Esq., Barrow Hall. The Railway Co. have $1\frac{3}{4}$ miles of railway in the township, and about $1\frac{3}{4}$ the Trent and Mersey canal also lies within the boundaries.

village of Barrow-on-Trent is pleasantly situated between the Trent and d Trunk canal, which are, here, less than one mile apart, six miles S. rby, and three miles from Chellaston, the nearest railway station. The edicated to St. Wilfrid, is a venerable edifice of stone consisting of nave with north and south aisles, south porch, and an embattled tower g three bells, two of which are of pre-Reformation date. The aisles are separated from the nave by three arches; those on the east end of the south aisle is a hagioscope or squint, behind the chancel pier, is a low archway communicating purpose is only conjectural. There was an altar at the aisle, as is shown by the sedile and piscina, which still remain. The north aisle formerly belonged to the Bothes, of Arlestone several memorials of that ancient family. These monuments when Bassano wrote, in 1710, but were subsequently removed, during repairs and alterations of the church in the 18th century. Two Bothe slabs remain—one bearing the date 1484. The latter is at the entrance of the chancel, and bears a man in armour. In the south wall of the south aisle which is the alabaster effigy of a priest in rich vestments the north aisle is the monument of Elizabeth, wife of Sindfen, who died in 1610, on which is the following epitaph

"A faithful, loving, chearful wife, her husband's comfort
Elizabeth was ever found modest and wise to bee;
Good housewife and good housekeeper, still helpful to
A neighbour kinde, by all approv'd according to her
A matrone wise, a mother deare, fifty two yeares a wife

Another large building, probably the chapel, formerly stood on the north side of it, but this was taken down some years ago.

Merrybower, a quarter of a mile S. from Arleston, was formerly an open common, and a noted place for cockfighting within living memory.

The township of Arleston and Sinfen is in Shardlow union.

TWYFORD and STENSON form a joint township and chapelry, containing 1,500 acres of land, belonging chiefly to Sir Vauncey Harpur Crewe, Bart., who is also lord of the manor. Its ratable value, according to the latest returns, is £7,512; and its population, in 1891, was 178.

The manor of Tuiforde, as the name is spelt in the Domesday Book, belonged at the time of the Norman Survey to Henry de Ferrers, and a little later, in the reign of Henry I., Twyford is named as one of the four knights' fees held by Richard de Curzon in this county. Subsequently it came into the possession of the Finderns of Findern, and passed by the marriage of the heiress of that family to Sir Richard Harpur, from whom it has descended to the present owner.

The village of Twyford, consisting of the church and a few scattered houses, stands on the north bank of the Trent, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles from Derby, and about two miles from Repton and Willington station on the Birmingham and Derby branch of the Midland railway. The river is here crossed by a ford from which the village derives its name. Twyford Hall is a large modern house on the bank of the Trent, occupied by a farmer; the old hall, which bears no traces of its former importance, has been converted into two labourers' cottages. The church, dedicated to St. Andrew, is a small structure of stone, consisting of chancel and nave, with tower and spire at the west end containing three bells. The low semi-circular chancel arch is a fragment of the original Norman church. It bears the characteristic zigzag ornamentation, and is still in good preservation. The lower stage of the tower, with its deeply splayed lancet windows, is a good sample of Early English work, but the upper portion is of a later style. The spire was struck by lightning in 1821, and a portion of it had, in consequence, to be taken down and rebuilt. The nave is a modern restoration in brick, and is lighted by round-headed windows. It is fitted with pews to seat about 100. In the chancel are three or four 17th century mural monuments to members of the Harpur family who resided at the hall, and later ones to the Bristowes and Wards. Twyford has been from early times a chapelry of Barrow, and the two benefices have always been held conjointly.

There is a small school in connection with the church, erected by subscription in 1842, at a cost of £125, exclusive of the site, which was given by Sir Geo. Crewe, Bart. The proceeds of John Harpur's charity, left in 1710, amounting to £15, are applied to the benefit of this school.

Stenson (Steintune in Domesday Book) is a hamlet and small village, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles S.W. from Derby. The manor at a very early period belonged to the Curzons of Croxall. It subsequently passed into the possession of the Finderns, and on the death of Thomas Findern, in 1558, this and other estates passed to his sister, the wife of Richard Harpur, in whose family they still remain. Michael Robinson and others also own land here. The Trent and Mersey canal and the Midland railway pass through the hamlet. The Wesleyans have a small chapel in the village, built in 1845.

BRAILSFORD.

Brailsford is an extensive parish and township, including within its limits the hamlets of Ednaston, Burrows, Culland, North Farms, Brailsford Common, Common Side and Millers' Grove. Its superficial extent is 4,366 acres, inclusive of 72 acres of roads, rivers, and waste lands; ratable value £6,560, and population (in 1891) 638. The soil is various; in the north it is partly light sand and peat, and partly gravel and clay, in the south and east marly clay, strong clay and heavy loam, and in the west partly clay and gravel. Dairy farming is extensively pursued—very little land being under the plough. The principal landowners are William Gisborne, Esq., Allestree Hall, who is also lord of the manor; William Cox, Esq., J.P., Brailsford House; Thomas Holmes, Esq.; Sir P. C. Walker, Bart., Osmaston Manor; the Exors. of Robert Archer; John Harrison, Esq., Snelston Hall; C. B. Kingdon, Esq., Woodlands, Melton Mowbray; Mrs. H. Clifford Lamb, Brailsford; Samuel Osborne, Esq., Quarndon; the Trustees of Ashbourne Grammar School; and Henry Stables Brough, Kirk Langley. Brailsford is in the hundred of Appletree; the electoral division of Brailsford; the petty sessional division of Derby; poor law union, county court district, and rural deanery of Ashbourne.

The manor of Brailsford, at the time of the Domesday Survey, belonged to Henry de Ferrers, under whom it was held by Elfin, whose descendants continued in possession and took the name of Brailsford. The male line failed about the year 1380, and the estate passed to an heiress who married Sir John Basset, of Chedale. After one descent it was inherited by Joan, sister and coheiress of Thomas Basset, and wife of Sir Ralph Shirley. Sir Ralph died in 1443, and the manor remained with his descendants till 1777, when Earl Ferrers sold it to Mr. John Webster, a banker in Derby. This gentleman subsequently became involved in financial difficulties, and this estate was purchased from his assignees by William Drury Lowe, Esq., of Locko, who afterwards sold it to Charles Upton, Esq., and it thence passed to the late Thomas William Evans, at whose death, in 1892, it was inherited by his relative, William Gisborne, Esq.

The village of Brailsford is of considerable extent, and pleasantly situated on the main road between Derby and Ashbourne, seven miles N.W. by N. from the former, six miles S. by E. from the latter, and five miles from Duffield, the nearest railway station. The church, dedicated to All Saints, stands on high ground, half-a-mile or more west from the village. The selection of such an inconvenient site is thus explained:—The church was originally built at the joint expense and for the use of two manors, Brailsford and Ednaston, and hence the otherwise inexplicable statement in Domesday Book, that in Brailsford "there is a priest and half a church." A similar entry occurs under Ednaston. The edifice consists of a spacious chancel, nave, south aisle, porch, and a western tower containing five bells. Very little of the original Norman work now remains. The arches of the aisle arcade, though Norman in shape, are, as Dr. Cox shows in his "Churches of Derbyshire," of modern date. The chancel was rebuilt in the Decorated style which prevailed about the beginning of the 14th century, and the pointed arch between the chancel and nave is of the same period, but the two piers that support it are very dissimilar. On the north side is a hagioscope, or "squint," passing obliquely through the wall into the chancel. The sedilia and piscina remain in the south wall. The east window of three lights is filled with stained glass, illustrating the story of the Good Samaritan. There are three two-light windows on the north and south sides, filled with coloured glass. The tower is a good specimen of 15th century Gothic. Above the porch is the date 1629, between the initials "W.M. & E.B." indicating the year when the porch was rebuilt. There were formerly several ancient inscribed alabaster slabs in the church, but they have all disappeared. There are tablets to the memory of members of the families of Cox, Boden, Draper, Smith, Palmer, Houlden, Hurd, Horsfall and Mosse. The church underwent a thorough restoration at a cost of £1,200 in 1885, when a new vestry was added, the interior walls cleansed from the many coats of whitewash which covered them, and the square box pews replaced by open benches of oak, with finely carved ends representing the instruments of the Passion and Death of Christ. The registers commence in 1647. The living is a rectory, valued in 1536 at £9 19s. 2d., now worth £583, derived from tithe rent-charge (£390) and 72 acres of glebe, in the gift of Earl Ferrers, and held by the Rev. James Guthrie Croker, B.A., since 1859.

The Primitive Methodists have a chapel in the village, erected in 1845. The school, built by Wm. Evans, Esq., and now the property of Wm. Gisborne, Esq., is attended by about 95 children. There are two good inns in the village, the Rose and Crown and the Saracen's Head. The Commissioners of Taxes hold their meetings at the former, and the Oddfellows have a lodge at the latter. The Wakes are held in the last week of October.

A little east of the village is Brailsford House, a large two-storied mansion, the property and seat of William Cox, Esq., J.P., whose family has been settled in and around Derby since the middle of the 18th century. William Cox was tutor to Earl Ferrers, and resided at Brailsford parsonage; his grandson, William, purchased the manor of Culland in 1794. The present owner, who succeeded his father, was educated at Rugby and Christ Church College, Cambridge, and took his M.A. degree in 1849.

Culland is a hamlet comprising four farms, situated 1½ miles S. of Brailsford. This small manor formerly belonged to the Draper family, from whom it passed by the marriage of an heiress to George Newell, Esq., who sold it to John Port, Esq., of Ilam. The hall, with the greater part of the estate, was purchased by William Cox, as stated. A short distance from the hall is Culland House, the property of Thomas Holmes, Esq., and residence of Ernest S. Milnes, Esq., J.P.

Ednaston is a village and manor comprising several scattered farms, 1½ miles S. of Brailsford. This manor formerly belonged to the Priory of Tutbury. After the dissolution of monasteries it came to the Shirleys. The Hall farm is now the property of John Harrison, Esq.; Sir P. C. Walker, Bart., and Thomas Tibbits, Esq., have also land here. Ednaston Lodge, a large and handsome mansion, surrounded by a park of 30 acres, is the property of C. B. Kingdon, Esq., and the residence of Mr. Robert Knowles.

Burrows, or Over Burrows, is a hamlet, consisting of four farms, one mile S.E. of Brailsford. The estate belongs to S. Osborne, Esq., Quarndon, in whose family it has been for about two centuries.

CHARITIES.—Mrs. Elizabeth Poole left, by will in 1698, the interest of £20, and the like sum was left by the Rev. S. Labouneille in 1714. The rector and churchwardens for the time being are the trustees. The late Thomas Cox, Esq., in 1843, bequeathed the sum of £15 yearly to be distributed at the sole discretion of the surviving resident representative of the family.

Post, Money Order, Telegraph Office and Savings Bank, Brailsford; Herbert Walker, postmaster. Letters from Derby by mail car arrive at 5 a.m. Delivery begins at 7-0 a.m., and despatch 7-45 p.m.

County Councillor for Brailsford Division—Samuel Osborne, Esq., Quarndon.

BREADSALL.

This parish contains 2,410 acres of land, lying between Ferriby brook and the Derwent. Its ratable value is £10,968, and the population in 1891 was 571. Sir Vauncey Harpur Crewe, Bart., is lord of the manor, and the following are the principal landowners:—Hugo Harpur Crewe, Esq., Melbourne; Richard Rainshaw Rothwell, Esq., J.P., Breadsall Priory; F. O. F. Bateman, Esq., J.P., Breadsall Mount; F. W. Cox, Esq., Priory Flatte; Dr. Benthall; the Rector, in right of his church; and Miss Morley. Both the Great Northern and the Midland railways pass through the parish, and are assessed at nearly one-half of the total ratable value. Breadsall is in the hundred of Appletree, electoral division of Brailsford, petty sessional division and county court district of Derby, poor law union of Shardlow, and rural deanery of Ilkeston.

The manor of Breadsall anciently belonged to the family of Dunne. About the beginning of the reign of Henry III., Robert de Duyn granted to his son, Sampson, a moiety of the manor, together with all appurtenances, except the advowson of the church, which he gave, with the other moiety, to his eldest son, Hugh. These moieties became known as Breadsall Netherhall and Breadsall Overhall. The descent of the former, after the demise of Sampson, has not been clearly traced. In the 25th year of Edward I. it was held by Giles Meynell, who probably married the heiress of Sampson de Duyn. In the 15th century the manor of Netherhall passed into the hands of the Illingworths, and was held by Sir Richard Illingworth in the reign of Edward IV. The other moiety, the manor of Breadsall Overhall with the advowson of the church, came into the possession of the Curzon family by the marriage of Johanna, daughter and heiress of Hugh de Duyn, and remained with them for eight generations. In the reign of Richard II., Cecilia, daughter and heiress of Thomas de Curzon, married William Dethick, into whose hands the manor accordingly passed, remaining with the Dethicks for about the same length of time as with the preceding family. John Dethick, lord of Breadsall Overhall, married the daughter and heiress of Richard Illingworth; and thus the two manors were again united, and have continued so up to the present time. They now belong to the Harpur Crewe family, into whose possession they passed by marriage with the heiress of John Dethick more than two and a half centuries ago.

The village of Breadsall is pleasantly situated at the foot of a steep hill, which shelters it from the north and east winds, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles N.E. by N. from Derby, and close to the station of its own name on the Great Northern railway. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is an ancient edifice of stone, comprising chancel, nave, north aisle, south porch, and a western tower, surmounted by a lofty and elegant spire which forms a conspicuous landmark for miles around. There was a church here in Saxon times, but that primitive structure gave place to a Norman edifice soon after the Conquest. Subsequent reconstructions in the early pointed and later Gothic styles have left but few traces of Norman work. The inner doorway of the porch, with its three tiers of mouldings, is late Norman; and the circular pillars of the aisle are believed to be of the same period. The tower is massive, and apparently of Early English date; but the Perpendicular style chiefly prevails in other parts of the fabric. Three stone sedilia remain in the south wall of the chancel, and beyond them is the piscina niche. The font is octagonal and ancient. In 1830 the south wall was rebuilt, and other repairs carried out, at an expense of £300; and in 1877 a considerable and much-needed restoration was commenced. The upper portion of the spire has been rebuilt and carried two feet higher, and the old oak pews replaced by modern benches. Five of the former, with effectively carved ends, have been retained; the old oak pulpit remains, and also an old oak chest, in which are preserved a few old books. This church was once rich in old oak, and much of it was used again at the late restoration. Above the communion table is a fine oak reredos, bearing carved representations of the birth of Christ and the Crucifixion.

There was formerly a Ladye Chapel, with its altar, at the north aisle; and during the restoration, in 1877, there was flooring, at the west end of the church, a beautiful piece of sculpture called a "Pieta," which probably stood in that chapel. It represents the Virgin with the dead Christ on her knee, and is exquisitely beautiful. The mutilation it has suffered was the breaking of the Virgin's hair; and we may, therefore, infer that it was carefully concealed by the Catholics to prevent its desecration by iconoclast reformers. A graphic sketch of this interesting piece of sculpture in Dr. Darwin's "Derbyshire." There are several tablets to the Darwin family, including one to the celebrated Erasmus Darwin, physician, as he is termed in the epitaph. There are five bells in the tower, presented by Mr. Wood in 1887. The registers date from 1550, the rectory worth £620 per annum, in the gift of Hugo Harpur Cotterell by the Rev. J. A. Whitaker, M.A., since 1886.

A priory of Hermit or Austin Friars was founded here by Hugh Dethicks in the reign of Henry III., and dedicated to the Virgin Mary. The endowments were not very ample, and it was, for some time, converted into a priory of Augustinian canons. When Henry VIII. laid his unholy hands on the possessions of the monasteries, this priory was valued at £10 17s. 9d. Edward VI. granted the priory and estate to Thomas Boleyn, Duke of Suffolk, who, the same year, transferred them to Thomas Boleyn. The latter subsequently obtained a license of alienation to the Duke, who did not, however, retain it very long. In 1597 it belonged to the Duke, but was shortly afterwards purchased by Sir John Bentley, of Morley. In 1622, it became the property of his daughter, the wife of Sir John Bentley, and the daughter and heiress of the latter married Sir Edward Mosley, Knt., to Sir John Bland. It subsequently passed from this family by the marriage of Ann, daughter of Edward Mosley, Knt., to Sir John Bland. It subsequently passed by sale, and in 1799 was purchased by Edward Bentley, who, dying shortly afterwards bequeathed the priory to his son, Sir John Bentley, poet, and philosopher, who spent the last years of his life here. He was the author of several works, but his literary fame rests on his "Botanic Garden" and "Loves of the Plants." After the death of Sir John Bentley, in 1858, the estate was purchased by the late Mr. J. Bentley, and his representatives of the latter sold it to Mr. H. J. Wood, formerly of Morley, recently purchased by R. R. Rothwell, Esq., J.P., the present owner.

The priory stood about one mile from the village, but the site of the original building above ground. The house which is now the residence of Sir John Bentley, in the latter part of the reign of Henry VIII. was very considerably enlarged and the old walls re-faced by Sir John Bentley. Many improvements have been carried out by the present owner, including the reservoir constructed in which 30,000 gallons of water can be stored. The house is lighted by electricity. The grounds are intersected by a rivulet which is used to supply the fish pond. The priory estate is tithe free, a privilege generally enjoyed by the lands.

The Rev. John Clayton, rector of the parish from 1738 to 1745, gave the sum of £200 towards the support of a school for the poor children to read and say their catechism. A school was erected in 1745, at the joint expense of the lord of the manor and the parishioners, but was superseded by the present school, built by Sir George Clayton in 1826. There are about 70 children in average attendance. There is a chapel in the village, built in 1826.

Near the church is the old manor house, the ancient residence of the early lords of the manor. It was partially rebuilt at the end of the 17th century, but a portion of the original structure, erected five or six centuries ago, remains. It has had a changeful fate since it ceased to sh manor. For a time it was occupied by John Hieron, the Nonconformist vicar of the parish, during the Commonwealth; it has been a farm house, a hunting box, a school, a public house for 130 years, a village shop, and now again a farm house. There are several very good residences in the parish, the names of which are given in the Directory. The Derby Water works are also situated in this parish, and occupy about 19½ acres of ground. They consist of two engine houses, with four powerful engines, collecting, storage and service reservoirs, and filtering beds, together capable of holding five million gallons of water. There are also three neat residences for the enginemens and foreman.

CHARITIES.—Anne Johnson gave a close of land called Bastard Orchard, containing 8a. 3r. 1½p., the rent thereof to be paid to such poor widows as have been only once married, and are of the age of sixty, and should there be no such widows the rents are to be distributed amongst poor fatherless girls residing in the parish. This close is now let for £26 yearly. The poor also receive £16 per annum from the Rev. John Walton's bequest, and £29 from the land left by Anthony Walker in 1714. There are other two small charities producing £1 6s. yearly.

BRETBY.

Bretby is a sparsely populated parish and small village in the hundred of Repton and Gresley, petty sessional division of Repton, poor law union and county court district of Burton-on-Trent, county council electoral division of Repton and Swadlincote, and deanery of Repton. Under the provisions of the Local Government Act of 1894, a parish council of five members has been assigned to Bretby, and it elects one representative to the rural district council. The estimated extent of the parish is 1,550 acres, of which the Earl of Carnarvon is sole owner and lord of the manor. The ratable value is £3,031, and the population in 1891 was 377.

The manor of Bretby, at the time of the Domesday Survey, formed part of the Crown lands; its previous English owner was Algar, Earl of Mercia, whose son fell fighting against the Norman intruders. Soon after the Conquest it became the property of the Earls of Chester, and subsequently passed, with part of the manor of Repton, to the family of Segrave. Sir John de Segrave, who held the office of King's lieutenant in Scotland, was taken prisoner at the battle of Bannockburn. In 1295 he was summoned to Parliament as a baron, and a few years later he obtained the King's licence to convert his mansion at Bretby into a castle. He married Margaret, daughter of Thomas de Brotherton, Earl of Norfolk, fifth son of Edward I.; and Elizabeth, their daughter and heiress, married John, Lord Mowbray. Subsequently, on the failure of the direct line of this family, Bretby Castle and manor descended to Maurice, Marquis of Berkeley, in right of his mother, Isabel, second daughter of Thomas Mowbray, first Duke of Norfolk. In 1585 the Berkely family sold their interest in Bretby for £2,500 to Sir Thomas Stanhope, Knt., of Shelford, grandfather of Philip Stanhope, first Earl of Chesterfield. The seventh Earl, dying unmarried in 1871, was succeeded in the title by his cousin, but this estate passed to his nephew, the present Earl of Carnarvon.

The castle is said to have been a building of great strength, but no account of it has been preserved. It was standing in the reign of Elizabeth, and the site is still discernible near the church. A magnificent mansion was built by the first Earl of Chesterfield. It was designed by the famous Inigo Jones, and its gardens, labyrinths, grottoes, and fountains rivalled those of Chatsworth. At right angles to the east wing was a beautiful chapel of a most elaborate and costly style. This splendid mansion and chapel were, no one knows why, pulled down by Philip, fifth Earl, in 1780. The present hall, built by the above nobleman, was not completed at the time of his death, in 1815. It is a noble castellated mansion of stone, surrounding a quadrangular court. The principal front is flanked by two circular towers, and from the centre rises a square tower with circular turrets at the angles. The park, containing between 600 and 700 acres, is picturesquely diversified and well wooded. In the grounds are six artificial lakes, varying in size from two to four acres. On the east side of the house is a venerable cedar of Lebanon, which was planted in the month of February, 1677. The park contains several hundred head of deer; and at the higher end is a fine training course, measuring 2½ miles on the flat.

The village is a delightful rural retreat near the northern boundary of the park, 3½ miles E. from Burton-on-Trent, which is its post and market town. The church, dedicated to St. Wystan, was formerly a chapel to Repton, and the prior and canons of that place were owners of the great tithes. These, after the dissolution of the priory, passed into lay hands, and were purchased from the Berkeley family, in 1585, by the grandfather of the first Earl of Chesterfield, and now belong to the Earl of Carnarvon. The old church was taken down, and the present one built on the site, in 1876-8, by Anne Elizabeth, widow of George Augustus Frederick, sixth Earl of Chesterfield, in memory of her husband, her son (the seventh Earl), and her daughter Evelyn, Countess of Carnarvon. It is in the Gothic style, and consists of chancel with north vestry, nave, and north aisle. All the windows are stained glass memorials, and on the south wall of the nave is a brass inscribed to the memory of Benjamin Disraeli, Earl of Beaconsfield, who was a frequent visitor at the Hall. At the west end of the church is a wooden turret containing five bells, which are rung by means of handles or levers placed near the organ. The floors are laid with encaustic tiles, and the roofs are of wood, beautifully panelled. Half-an-acre of ground, given by the late Earl of Carnarvon, has been walled off for a graveyard, all interments previous to this having been at the mother church of Repton. The living is a donative, worth £200 per annum, in the gift of the Earl of Carnarvon, and held by the Rev. E. Hugh Rycroft, M.A.

The National School, erected in 1806, and enlarged in recent years, has an average attendance of 43 children. It has a small endowment.

Bretby Colliery was commenced in 1855 by the Earl of Chesterfield, but this is now used as a pumping station, and another shaft sunk at Stanton, near Stanton Wood. About 200 men and boys are employed.

BOUNDARY.

Boundary, two miles N.W. from Ashby-de-la-Zouch, is an extra-parochial liberty, part of which is in the parish of Blackfordby, Leicestershire. There are now 20 cottages in Derbyshire, all of them occupied by labourers. The estate has an acreage of about four acres, rental value £96. Lord Donington is the principal property owner; and the chief inhabitants are Joseph Storer, carpenter, and John Thornley, vict., horse and cattle dealer, grocer, &c., Red Lion Inn, who is overseer for Boundary.

CALKE.

This is a parish in the Repton and Gresley hundred containing 643 acres of land under assessment, with a ratable value of £981 17s. Od., and population of about 60. It is in the Repton petty sessional division, Ashby-de-la-Zouch poor law union and county court district, and deanery of Melbourne. The sole landowner is Sir Vauncey H. Crewe, who is also lord of the manor. The village is small, and is situated about five miles N. by E. from Ashby-de-la-Zouch, and 10 miles S. from Derby.

A priory of Augustinian canons was established here at an early period. Glover, in his "History and Gazetteer of the County of Derby," says it was founded by the Earl of Mercia, who was lord of the manor before the Conquest. But as neither the manor nor the priory is mentioned in Domesday Book, the assertion is open to doubt. It was, however, in existence very soon after the Conquest. Gregory de Diva, about the year 1100, gave, by charter still extant, to God and to the church of St. Giles of Calke, and to the religious men there serving God, the church of St. Anne of Sutton-on-Soar. Sometime before 1161, Maude, widow of Ranulph, 4th Earl of Chester, gave to God and St. Mary and to the canons of Calke the advowson of the church of St. Wicstan, of Repton, and the working of the quarry in that place, on condition that Calke be made a dependent cell on the priory, to be founded at Repton, whenever a suitable opportunity shall present itself. Hugh, 5th Earl, confirmed and enlarged the grant of his mother, and other benefactors added to the endowment. The Priory of Repton was founded in 1172, and thenceforth Calke became a dependent cell on that house.

The priory flourished till the Reformation, when its possessions were confiscated by the Crown. In 1547, Edward VI. granted the site to John, Earl of Warwick, to be held on a lease of 49 years for a peppercorn rent, and after that for 40 years longer at £6 13s. 4d. per annum. In 1577, it was the seat and property of Roger Wensley, Esq.; five years later the estate was sold to Robert Bainbrigge, Esq., and that gentleman, in 1621, conveyed it to Henry Harpur, Esq. (afterwards Sir Henry Harpur, Bart.), from whom it has descended to Sir Vauncey Harpur Crewe, the present owner.

Calke Abbey, the seat of the worthy baronet, is a large, handsome stone mansion surrounded by a well-wooded park stocked with fallow and red deer. The south front presents a fine appearance, the portico, supported by four large stone columns, being approached by two broad flights of stone steps. The abbey contains a fine collection of English birds, and, in 1894, Sir V. H. Crewe became the possessor of the great auk's egg, for which he gave the sum of 300 guineas.

The family traces its pedigree backwards to the time of the Norman Conquest. The remote ancestor was Richard le Harpur, a contemporary of William I. Sir Richard Harpur was Sergeant-at-Law and Chief Justice of the Common Pleas in the reign of Elizabeth. He married Jane Findern, who, on the death of her brother Thomas, inherited Swarkeston, Findern, Stenson, and Twyford. His grandson, Sir Henry Harpur, purchased Calke, which thenceforth became the seat of this branch of the family. Sir John Harpur, Knt. and Bart., of Calke, grandson of the above Sir Henry, became by the death of his relative, Sir John Harpur of Swarkeston, without surviving issue, heir to the vast estates of that gentleman. He married Anne, daughter of Lord Willoughby, by whom he had a son and a daughter. The former, Sir John Harpur, Bart., married Catherine, youngest daughter and coheir of Thomas Lord Crewe, of Steine, Co. Northampton, and their great grandson, Sir Henry, assumed, by royal permission in 1808, the name and arms of Crewe. He married Miss Fanny Hawkins, by whom he had four sons and two daughters. He was succeeded by his eldest son, Sir George Crewe, Bart., who was sheriff of Derbyshire in 1821. Sir Vauncey Harpur Crewe, the present holder of the title and estates, is his grandson.

The church, which bears the same dedication as the priory, was completely modernised in 1826, by a casing of new stone throughout, and the addition of a small embattled tower, which contains an ancient bell. The entire cost was defrayed by Sir George Crewe. Against the north wall of the chancel is a neat marble monument to Sir John Harpur, who died in 1741, and Catherine, his wife; and the memory of the late baronet, who died in 1886, is similarly honoured. The register dates from 1699. Sir V. H. Crewe, Bart., is the patron, and the Rev. Thomas Orrell, vicar of Foremark, is the present chaplain.

CHADDESSEN.

This is a parish containing 2,068 acres, lying on the east side of Derby borough boundary. It is in the hundred of Morleston and Litchurch, petty sessional division and county court district of Derby, union and rural district of Shardlow, and deanery of Ilkeston. It is valued for rating purposes at £8,072, and has a population of 682. Sir Henry Wilmot, Bart., is the principal landowner; W. D. N. Drury-Lowe, Esq., owns some land, and is lord of the manor.

At the time of the Domesday Survey, Chaddesden belonged to Henry de Ferrers, and it remained with that family till the 13th century, when it was forfeited through treason. This and their other estates were conferred upon Edmund Crouchback, and became part of the Duchy of Lancaster. Crouchback died in 1296, and the manor appears to have been held under him in portions by William de Chaddesden, Henry de Cordville, and Andrew Lutterell. These lands subsequently passed through various families to the Wilmots. In the pedigree given in Glover's "History of Derbyshire," Robert Wilmot, who died in 1638, is said to have purchased the Chaddesden estate; but in Burke's "Peerage and Baronetage" the purchase is ascribed to an earlier Wilmot, John, who made Chaddesden his residence. The family is said to be of Saxon origin, and was settled, antecedently to the Conquest, in Nottinghamshire, whence it removed into Derbyshire in 1539. Edward Wilmot, Esq., a physician of great eminence, was created a baronet in 1759, by George II., for his professional services to the Royal family. He was also appointed Physician-General to the Army and Physician-in-Ordinary to George III. Two other branches of the family have been raised to baronetcies. Sir Henry Wilmot, Bart., C.B., the present owner of the estate, was lieutenant-colonel in the Rifle Brigade, and received the Victoria Cross for acts of personal bravery at Lucknow. He represented South Derbyshire in Parliament from 1869 to 1885, and is chairman of the county council.

Chaddesden Hall, the seat of Sir Henry Wilmot, is a large mansion of brick, rebuilt by Robert Wylmot, Esq., about 170 years ago, and stands within a well-wooded park.

The Curzons, the Poles, and the Sacheverels had formerly estates in Chaddesden. In 1593 Robert Newton died seized of the manor and of a considerable estate, part of which he had purchased from Francis Curzon and German Pole, Esqrs. The manor has long been united with Locko, and is the property of W. D. N. Drury-Lowe, Esq.

The village is situated $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles east of Derby. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is an ancient edifice, but there is no record of its foundation. It appears to have been rebuilt in the 14th century, and to have been considerably altered and the tower added in the following century, when the Perpendicular style had superseded the Decorated. The edifice underwent a thorough restoration in 1859, at a cost of £2,000. The east window of the chancel, consisting of five lights with traceried head, is filled with richly stained glass representing the Crucifixion, and several other scriptural events. A beautifully carved oak screen, supposed to be 15th century work, separates the chancel from the nave; and another interesting fragment of still older work is the richly sculptured sedile with piscina niche adjoining, in the south wall of the chancel. On the opposite wall is a projecting stone book-rest, at which the deacon read the gospel; and beneath this an aumbry, with a small oaken down. A little to the left of this, below the north window, is another aumbry recess. The nave is separated from each aisle by an arcade of three pointed arches. There was formerly a chapel at the east end of each aisle, and the carved stones that formed the altar piece of each chapel are still in the east wall, but now very much worn. The piscina and the sedilia also remain. The north aisle is lighted by three stained glass windows, memorials of members of the Wilmot family. On the north wall is the cenotaph of Sir Edward Wilmot, M.D., the first baronet, who died at Herrington in 1786, aged 93, "and was interred, by his own express directions, in the parish church of Monkton, near his beloved wife." The pulpit is a massive one of stone. The tower contains three bells, one of which is apparently of pre-Reformation date. The lower stage forms the baptistry, and here is a modern octagonal font of white marble, handsomely carved and inlaid with bosses of Derbyshire spar. The bowl is supported on a black marble column, rising from a gritstone base. The old font, now disused, stands in the north aisle. It is apparently very ancient, and of unusually large dimensions. The original base is gone, and it now rests on an inverted font that was used previous to the present marble one. The church will accommodate about 300, and all seats are free.

Henry de Chaddesden, Archdeacon of Leicester, who died in 1346, founded a chantry, and endowed it with lands for the support of a warden and two chaplains there to minister at the several altars and sing Mass for the King, for himself, for his ancestors and benefactors, and for the souls of all the faithful departed. In 1381 the original endowment was considerably increased by additional grants of land, and a third chaplain appointed. The chantry was suppressed in the reign of Edward VI., and the chantry lands sold to various persons.

The living is a perpetual curacy, worth £87 yearly, in the gift of Sir H. Wilmot, Bart., and held by the Rev. F. E. W. Wilmot, M.A., since 1879.

The Wesleyans have a small chapel in the village, built in 1838.

The National School is a neat building of brick, erected in 1873, to accommodate 160 children.

The New Cemetery for Derby is within this parish. It occupies 43 acres, situated on the south side of Nottingham road.

CHARITIES.—Robert Wilmot, Esq., by will dated 1638, founded ten almshouses at Derby and six at Chaddesden. Thomas Gilbert, of Locke, by will about 1657, gave £20 to purchase a rent-charge of 20s. yearly, to be distributed amongst 20 poor persons of Chaddesden. John Berryford, by will in 1813, gave to the vicar and churchwardens of Chaddesden £600 stock in the three per cent. consols, the dividends thereof to be applied to the poor widows and fatherless children of the parish. The bequest was reduced by the payment of legacy duty to £540, which is invested in the 2½ per cent. consols, and produces £14 17s. yearly, which is paid to six widows at one shilling per week each.

CHELLASTON.

This is a small parish in the hundred of Repton and Gresley ; petty sessional division and county court district of Derby ; union and rural district of Shardlow ; electoral division and deanery of Melbourne. Under the Local Government Act of 1894 it has a parish council of five members, and united with Sinfin Moor returns one district councillor and guardian. The total area of the parish, according to Ordnance measurement, is 830 acres, belonging to several proprietors, of whom the principal are Sir Vauncey Harpur Crewe, Bart. ; Trussell's trustees, 121 acres ; the Vicar, glebe land, 59 acres ; Messrs. Thomas Mather, 36 acres ; T. P. Stableford, 53 acres ; Walter Hy. Holman, 27 acres ; Thos. R. Forman, 22 acres ; Wm. Toone Sutton, 16 acres ; and Sykes' exors., 20 acres. The Derby and Ashby-de-la-Zouch branch of the Midland railway and the Derby canal intersect the parish, and there is a station on the former near the village. The total gross rental of the land and property in the parish is £3,180, the ratable value £2,704, and the population in 1891 was 497. The soil is marl, clay, and sand, and the chief crops are wheat, barley, oats, and potatoes. A large portion of the land is laid down in grass. Gypsum, or alabaster, was formerly very extensively quarried in the parish and neighbourhood, and sent to all parts of the country, but the bed is now nearly exhausted.

At the time of the Domesday Survey part of the manor of Celerdestune (Chellaston) was held under the Crown, and part under Henry de Ferrers ; and subsequently the manor was attached to and held under the Duchy of Lancaster. A family of the name of Whinyates was long resident here. In 1565, Queen Elizabeth, by letters patent, appointed Thomas Whynyarde bailiff of her manor of Chellardeston, parcel of the Duchy of Lancaster. In the same reign Sir Richard Harpur possessed lands here which are still in the hands of his descendant. The manor remained with the Crown till 1604, when it was granted by James I. to the Earl of Nottingham, who shortly afterwards conveyed it to Henry, Earl of Huntingdon. This nobleman, in 1622, conveyed the Manor House and certain lands by deed to Richard Whinyates, whose family had long held the same under a lease. The Whinyates owned about two-thirds of the parish, but their connection with Chellaston ceased about the year 1726, when Charles Whinyates, Esq., sold the estate in parcels. There are no remains of the Manor House. From an inventory of the effects of John Whinyates, taken in 1664, it appears to have been a mansion of considerable magnitude. There is a tradition that Robin Hood was born in Chellaston Manor House.

The village stands about four miles south of Derby. In the neighbourhood are numerous furnaces for the manufacture of plaster from gypsum. There are some good houses, but here and there may be seen antiquated ones of wood and plaster with roofs of thatch. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, is an ancient building of stone, consisting of chancel, nave, south aisle, and embattled western tower containing a clock and three bells. The tower, which is of very poor architectural design, was built in 1841, at a cost of £600. The rest of the edifice is in the Early English style of the thirteenth century. In the early years of the present century, when the church was repewed, "a great number of ancient alabaster slabs were destroyed, and the then churchwarden was permitted to pave his stable floor with them." During the incumbency of the present vicar the interior of the church has been completely renovated, the gallery put up in 1841 has been removed, and the old pews replaced by handsome seats of pitch-pine. The coating of stucco has been removed from the walls, and the windows reglazed with small diamond panes. The nave is divided from the south aisle by three pointed arches springing from octagonal columns. There was formerly an altar at the east end of the aisle, as shown by the piscina niche which still remains in the south wall. On the floor is a large alabaster slab bearing the incised figures of a man and his wife with their seven children. The inscription is nearly obliterated, but what remains shows that it is the monument of John Bawcock.

and Margaret his wife, who died September 13th, 1557. Near this are three other incised slabs, but the inscriptions are quite illegible. The first entry in the register is in 1570.

This church, as part of the rectory of Melbourne, was given by Henry I. to the see of Carlisle. The rectory was enfranchised by Act of Parliament in 1704, and subsequently the great tithes were sold by Lord Melbourne to the respective landowners. The commons were enclosed in 1802, when an allotment was awarded to the curate in lieu of the small tithes. The living is now a vicarage, worth £137 per annum, in the gift of the Bishop of Southwell, and held by the Rev. Joseph Hughes, B.A., Emmanuel Coll., Camb.

The Baptists and Wesleyan Methodists have chapels in the village. That belonging to the latter body was erected in 1873. It contains a beautiful alabaster reredos in the Decorated Gothic style, consisting of three deeply moulded arches bearing texts of Scripture. It is a memorial of W. T. Whelpton (of pill fame), who was a frequent visitor to the village and assisted very largely in the erection of the chapel. The pulpit and font are also of alabaster. The old chapel, built in 1816, is now used as a Sunday school. The educational affairs of the parish are managed by a School Board of five members, by whom a school was erected in 1877, at a cost of £2,250, for the accommodation of 120 children.

CHILCOTE.

Chilcote is a civil parish and township, situated in the detached portion of the hundred of Repton and Gresley; petty sessional division of Swadlincote; county court district of Tamworth, and union of Ashby-de-la-Zouch, to which it has been recently transferred from Tamworth union. Ecclesiastically it is part of the parish of Clifton Campville, in the diocese of Lichfield. The total area is 1,332 acres, ratable value £2,055. Mrs. Robertson, widow of the late Francis William Robertson, is lady of the manor and sole owner of the parish.

The village, which was rebuilt by the late F. Robertson, Esq., is situated 6½ miles S.W. from Ashby-de-la-Zouch, and three miles from Donisthorpe station. A chapel, dedicated to St. Matthew, was erected here at an early period. It was rebuilt in 1842, and thoroughly restored in 1885, by Mrs. Robertson, in memory of her son. Its parts are a chancel and nave, with a bell turret on the west gable. The living is united with the rectory of Clifton. The tithe rent-charge is £190. In connection with the chapel is a small school attended by thirteen children.

Near the chapel are some slight remains of the old hall of Chilcote, once the seat of the Milwards and afterwards of the Clarkes.

About two miles south of the village is No Man's Heath, where the four counties of Derby, Leicester, Warwick, and Stafford meet. This was formerly a favourite resort of prize ring fighters, for if stopped by the police of one county they had but to remove into the next field and were then in another county.

CHURCH GRESLEY.

This parish, situated in the south-western corner of the county, bordering on Leicestershire, comprises the townships of Church Gresley, Castle Gresley, Drakelow, and Linton, and formerly included Swadlincote, now a separate parish. It is in the hundred of Repton and Gresley; petty sessional division of Swadlincote; county court district and union of Burton-on-Trent; and deanery of Repton.

The township of Church Gresley contains, according to the ratebooks, 1,226½ acres of land, and is valued for rating purposes at £20,460. The population in 1891 was 6,309, an increase of 887 since 1881. The manorial rights, which are of considerable value, belong to Lord Donington, and his lordship, John Hall, Esq., C.C., Oversall; Robt. Beard, Esq., Lynn; and the Exors. of Jas. Woodward, are the principal landowners. The Midland Railway Company own the land occupied by 3 miles 18 chains of railway.

Coal is abundant in the township and neighbourhood, and potter's clay is also plentiful. The former is wrought at the Church Gresley colliery, which has been in operation about 70 years. There are two workable seams, one five feet thick and the other eight. About 250 hands are employed. The clay is of excellent quality, and is largely manufactured into all kinds of sanitary earthenware appliances, domestic utensils, fire bricks, encaustic tiles, &c. These potteries give employment to a large number of the inhabitants, and some of the goods produced are second to none in the market. This is notably the case with several kinds of water-closets and lavatories manufactured by Mr. B. Robinson, which are deservedly held in high favour by architects and builders.

The village of Church Gresley is situated five miles S. by E. from Burton-on-Trent, about the same distance west from Ashby-de-la-Zouch, and about half-a-mile from the railway stations at Castle Gresley and Swadlincote. It is a place of considerable extent, and is rapidly increasing with the increasing prosperity of its local manufactures. For the better management of sanitary affairs, the parish was amalgamated with the Swadlincote Local Board district in 1893, and returns six members to the urban district council, which has taken the place of the old Local Board.

Waterworks to supply Church Gresley, Swadlincote, and Ashby Wolds were erected by the Burton-on-Trent Sanitary Authority in 1879, at a cost of £14,000, and a further sum of £5,000 was spent the same year in sewerage this village. The "Wakes," or village feast, commences on the first Sunday in August, and is continued during the week.

The church (SS. George and Mary) is an ancient building of stone, in the Gothic style, consisting of chancel, nave, and north aisle, with an embattled tower at the east end. Adjoining it was formerly a priory of Augustinian canons, founded by William de Gresley, in the early part of the 12th century, and to it was subsequently appropriated this church, and also that of Lullington. Later Gresleys gave lands in Heathcote, Church Gresley, Castle Gresley, Swadlincote, and Lullington to the canons, but the priory was neither large nor wealthy, and is not noticed by Dugdale in his Monasticon. There is not a complete list of priors forthcoming, but Mr. Cox, in his "Churches of Derbyshire," has given the names of several, and much other interesting information concerning the convent. The last prior was John Okeley, in whose time the monastery was dissolved. The gross yearly revenue was returned at £29 13s. 8d., leaving a clear income, after deductions, of £31 6s. The prior was allowed a pension of £5 12s. 6d., and each of the priests serving at Gresley and Lullington, £5 16s. 8d. The priory and priory lands were sold by Henry VIII. to Henry Criche, one of the traffickers in monastic estates, and shortly afterwards they were transferred to Sir Christopher Alleyne. The property remained with this family till last century, when it passed to the Meynells, from whom it was purchased by the Gresleys of Drakelow, and was sold by the late Sir Roger Gresley in 1828.

All the monastic buildings, and also the choir or chancel of the church, which had been used by the canons as the conventual chapel, were pulled down soon after the dissolution of the priory, but fortunately, the rest of the church, being for the use of the parishioners, could not be included in the sale of the priory lands, and thus escaped demolition. The edifice in its curtailed form was thenceforth used for Divine service. In 1786 its dilapidated condition called for speedy reparation, but the work was done without any regard to architectural harmony. The church was again restored in 1872; at the same time the present chancel was built on the site of the old one, and the nave reseated with open benches. The arcade of the aisle is 14th century work, but the arches are not uniform, the western one being smaller than the other two. The tower, which stands at the east end of the aisle, belongs to the 15th century, and was formerly open to the choir through a lofty arch. There are three bells, two of which bear the date 1639, and the other is probably a little older. The Church Goods Commissioners of Edward VI. state in their report that there were four bells, whereof two were claimed by Henry Criche, the purchaser of the priory.

The Gresleys were patrons of the priory, and many members of that family were buried here; but all their pre-Reformation monuments have disappeared, nor does there remain a single inscribed memento to either prior or canon, though doubtless there were once many such within the sacred precincts. During some excavations in 1861, the foundation of a thick wall was discovered near the site of the choir or convent chapel; and close by were found three stone coffins, containing nearly perfect skeletons. The broken lid of one was ornamented with a floriated cross, but there was neither inscription nor heraldic device to show whose remains they were. The oldest monument now remaining in the church is one to Sir Thomas Gresley, of Drakelow, who died June 5th, 1699. It bears a life-sized figure of the baronet in alabaster, kneeling beneath an arch, with his left hand placed across his breast and his right hand extended, and around the arch are impaled the arms of all the family alliances, from the time of Nigel, their remote ancestor, downwards. There are also tablets to later members of the family. The Alleynes are represented by one monument, bearing the date 1712, and a long genealogical epitaph, now nearly obliterated. Above the pulpit is the funeral brass of the late Rev. George Wood Lloyd, D.D., who was for the lengthened period of 67 years incumbent of this parish, and died in 1860, at Stapenhill, in this county.

The font is dated 1872, and the organ was added in 1889. The first legible entry in the register is 1584; the baptism register commences in 1674, and that of marriages in 1813.

The living is a vicarage, net yearly value £254, with residence, in the gift of Gimeon's Trustees, and held since 1892 by the Rev. F. R. Averill Hoare, M.A., Christ Church College, Cambridge, and Merchant Taylors' School, London.

The churchyard was enlarged in 1839, and again in 1861. One of the stone coffins above mentioned is still preserved here. The headstones are all modern and deserve no special reference, excepting one, which bears melancholy evidences of the ravages of Death in one family. It is the memorial of the six children of William and Elizabeth Pope, of Castle Gresley, who died within a fortnight.

The members of the United Methodist Free Church have a place of worship in the village. It is a plain brick building, erected in 1876, at a cost of £600, and will seat 300. The Wesleyan Chapel was built in 1881, and will seat nearly 300. It is a plain building of brick, and cost, including the site, £600. The Primitive Methodists erected their present chapel in 1882. It is built of brick with stone dressings, and is excellently fitted up with galleries, affording a total accommodation for 600 persons. A fine organ, built by Taylor, of Leicester, at a cost of £340, was put in in 1892. The People's Hall has been purchased by the same body, and is used as a Sunday school. There are chapels belonging to the same sect in Wilmot Road and Coppice Side. The foundation stone of the Salvation Army Barracks was laid December 1st, 1888.

The National School was erected on the present site in 1865, to supersede the old one built in 1818. It contains two departments, mixed and infants, and is endowed with the interest of £20, left by Joseph Leedham. The Board Schools, consisting of three departments, were opened in 1877, and have been enlarged since. There is a total accommodation for 710 children, and there are 845 names on the rolls.

A Burial Board, consisting of nine members, was formed April 23rd, 1877; and a cemetery, containing $6\frac{1}{2}$ acres, was laid out at a total cost—including the erection of a sexton's house and mortuary chapel—of £7,600.

A Floral and Horticultural Society was established in 1890, and so far its yearly exhibitions have been very successful.

A little distance north of the village is Gresley Old Hall, now let in tenements, but still retaining unmistakable evidences of its former splendour. It is supposed to have been built by Sir Christopher Alleyne out of the materials of the old priory. The panelling in one room remains intact, but now painted over, and in the top rooms are the cock lofts—relics of a sport and an age now past. The Hall is the property of John Hall, Esq., C.C., who purchased it from Lord Donington about six years ago.

Merton Villa, the property and residence of Mr. Alfred Eley, was erected in 1874. It is delightfully situated on rising ground, and commands extensive views of the surrounding country. The spires of Lichfield Cath fine clear day, and also the smoke issuing from Cannock Staffordshire.

Adjacent to the village is Gresley Common belonging to about 24 in number. The common rights were granted to 150 years ago by the Gresley family, but the minerals were grant. In late years many encroachments have been made has reduced its extent from 80 acres to 70; but efforts are to recover the enclosed land, and to obtain the concession to benefit of all the parishioners. At present it is an unproductive pits and hollows from which the clay has been taken, but if laid out it would be an ornament to the village and an attraction for the inhabitants.

CASTLE GRESLEY is a small township adjoining Church. Its estimated extent is returned at 545½ acres, ratable population in 1891 was 864. The Burton and Leicester railway passes through the township, and also the short line land belongs to several proprietors, the principal of whom Beard, Esq., Lynn, near Walsall; John Beard Esq., 1 Burton-on-Trent; Mrs. Clay, London; Hugh Brooks, Bur Exors. of Morris Piddock.

The soil is a light sandy loam; oats and wheat are grown half of the land is laid down in grass. Beneath lies coal has been wrought at Cadley Hill since 1861. There are the main coal, 7 feet thick, is reached at a depth of 100 main coal, 5 feet thick, at a depth of 155 yards; and the thick, at a depth of 185 yards. There are other thinner clunch intervening. There are about 286 hands employed.

At the time of the Norman Survey, Nigel de Stafford held manors in Derbyshire and Staffordshire. Subsequently the chief seat of the family, which was thenceforth styled de Gr a castle here is evident from the place-name, but it does not of mediæval history, neither is it noticed by any ancient writer when or by whom it was demolished. It is supposed to have Mount, where there is a conical mound or tumulus rising to the summit, whence there is an extensive view of the surrounding the base, the Mound, or "Castle Nob," as it is called, measured diameter, and gradually tapers upwards to six yards at the top.

The village of Castle Gresley is situated four miles S.E. and near Gresley station, on the Burton and Leicester railway. For ecclesiastical purposes Castle Gresley is united Primitive Methodists and the Baptists have chapels here; the former body was erected in 1862, at a cost of £650, and enlarged seat 250. In connection with it is a fine schoolroom, erected £672. The Baptist chapel will seat 400. It is built of ornamental stone dressings, and cost £313. The date is 18 was erected by the Board in 1884, to accommodate 150. attend the school at Linton.

DRAKELOW is a township containing 1,391 acres of land east bank of the Trent, from two to four miles south from for rating purposes at £2,490, and has 152 inhabitants, 100 houses. The soil is a sandy loam with sand and marl in crops are barley, oats, and turnips. Sir Robert Gresley, Bart. and lord of the manor.

At the time of the Domesday Survey, Drakelow was held by Stafford, who also held several manors in Staffordshire. It became their chief residence, and the family was thenceforth

The first who appears to have settled at Drakelow was George Gresley, Esq., created a baronet in 1611. The Hall is a large and handsome mansion of stone, situated in a park of 140 acres well stocked with deer.

Drakelow was originally in the parish of Stapenhill, and anciently had its chapel, which, together with the mother church, was confirmed to Burton Abbey, in 1185. The chapel was demolished long ago, and not a vestige remains to mark the site where it stood.

LINTON is a township and village containing 938 acres of land under assessment; ratable value, £4,389; and population 1,126. The soil is a rich loam, sand and clay, yielding excellent crops of oats, barley, wheat, potatoes, and turnips. Coal is abundant in the neighbourhood, and a very large number of the inhabitants are employed in the pits. The Coton Park and Linton colliery has been in operation about 20 years. The shaft is sunk to a depth of 200 yards to the main coal, which is about 12 feet thick. There are at present about 250 hands employed. Just beyond the boundary of the township, in Leicestershire, is Netherseal colliery, which commenced work in 1872. Three seams are worked—Main, Stockings, and Eureka. The main seam is 14 feet thick of good marketable coal. About 520 men are employed.

The land belongs to several proprietors, of whom the following are the most extensive: Morris Richardson, Esq., J.P., King Standing, Burton-on-Trent (313 acres); John Beard, Esq., J.P., Linton Manor House (122 acres); Mr. William Burton, Rosliston (105 acres); Henry Yeomans, Burton-on-Trent; Lieut.-Col. Milligan, J.P., Caldwell Hall (49 acres); Mrs. Clay (75 acres); Sidney Evershed, Esq., M.P. (39 acres); the Netherseal Colliery Co. (97 houses and 21 acres), and Mr. George Gotheridge, Grangewood Farm, Netherseal (20 acres).

The village, long and straggling, is situated five miles S.E. from Burton-on-Trent, six miles W. from Ashby-de-la-Zouch, 13 miles N.E. from Lichfield, and one mile from Gresley station on the Burton and Leicester branch of the Midland railway. Though enjoying its fair share of prosperity in late years, such does not appear, to have been the case in the past if we may believe a popular local rhyme:—

“ Clifton spire and Lullington spud
Beggarily Linton and Gresley wood.”

For the convenience of the increasing population a church (chapel-of-ease) was erected here in 1880, at a cost of nearly £4,000, contributed chiefly by Mrs. Clay, Robert William and John Beard, Esqrs., and Mrs. John Beard. The district allotted to it includes also Castle Gresley. The edifice (Christ Church) is a large structure of brick in the Gothic style, consisting of chancel, clerestoried nave, north and south aisles, and bell turret containing one bell. The arches of the arcade rest on circular piers of stone. There is a fine organ, built by Messrs. Richardson & Son, of Preston, at a cost of £500. The nave and aisles are fitted with open benches of pitchpine to seat 450.

The Wesleyans have had a chapel here since 1799. The present edifice was built in 1873, at a cost of £600, and will seat 300. The Primitive Methodist chapel, at Linton Heath, was erected in 1878, at a cost of £259, and that at Woodville in 1890, at a cost of £849.

The Board School for the united district of Linton and Castle Gresley was erected in 1884. It is a spacious brick structure, of an attractive style of architecture, with five ventilating turrets. There are two departments, mixed and infants', capable of accommodating 400 children. The buildings and play ground occupy three roods, and cost £1,500.

COTON-IN-THE-ELMS.

Coton-in-the-Elms was severed from Lullington, and made a separate ecclesiastical parish in 1866. It is in the hundred of Repton and Gresley, petty sessional division of Swadlincote, union and county court district of Burton-on-Trent, and rural district and deanery of Repton. The total extent of the parish is 1,163 acres; ratable value, £2,304; and the population in 1891 was 498. Mrs. Anson-Horton, of Catton Hall (lady of the manor); Lieut.-Col. Milligan, of Caldwell Hall; and Thos. Tibbetts are the principal landowners. The soil is variable, being in places gravel, marl, or clay, on which wheat, barley, and oats are chiefly grown.

Cotune is one of the manors mentioned in Domesday Book, and at the time of the Survey it was held by the Abbot of Burton. It had its chapel at an early date, certainly as early as 1291. This chapel was subordinate to the mother church at Lullington, and was endowed with certain lands for the maintenance of a priest to officiate therein. It was disused after the Reformation, probably on account of the inadequacy of the income to support any except a celebrate clergyman. The last priest was Henry Mallaber, who held the living in 1552. Soon after that the chapel was demolished, and in 1571 the lands that had belonged to it were granted to John Marshe and his heirs for ever. All external traces of the building were removed, and the exact spot where it had stood was not known till 1866, when Mr. Colville investigated the site, and discovered the foundations. Four stones have been put down to mark the corners of the site, and in the centre is another one bearing an inscription, from which some of the above information has been taken.

The present church, dedicated to St. Mary, stands a short distance from the site of the old chapel. It was built in 1845-6, and comprises chancel, nave, western porch, and an embattled tower with octagonal spire, containing one bell. The nave is fitted with open benches to seat 247 persons. There are three stained glass windows in memory of members of the Horton family. The living is a vicarage worth £160 per annum, with residence, in the gift of Mrs. Anson-Horton, of Catton Hall, and held by the Rev. Jas. Burdekin.

There is a good school, with master's house attached, attended by 120 children. The Wesleyans have a chapel in the village.

The charities of the parish amount to £3 4s. yearly, of which sum £2 is distributed in prizes amongst the school children or given in bonuses on their savings in the penny bank, and £1 4s. is given in clothing to the poor.

In a field on Overfields Farm is the stump of a tree, now very little above the ground, on which a soldier was executed for desertion during the Civil War. The circumstance is thus recorded in Lullington church registers, under the date 1642:—"Philip Greensmith, a soldier, was executed upon a tree at the green of Coton for deserting his colours, March 31st."

Post, Money Order Office, and Savings Bank, Coton-in-the-Elms; Mrs. M. A. Smith, postmistress. Letters from Burton-on-Trent, by foot messenger, arrive at 9-0 a.m.; despatch, 4-35 p.m. Nearest Telegraph Office, Gresley Station (over three miles).

CROXALL.

This parish is situated in the extreme south-western a being divided from Staffordshire by the rivers Mease and T little below the parish church. It comprises the townshi Catton in Derbyshire, part of the village of Edingale, and a Oakley in the adjoining county. The township of Croxall Repton and Gresley; petty sessional division of Swadlincote court district of Tamworth, and deanery of Repton; and e 1,585½ acres, exclusive of roads and water surface. The superincumbent on marl, and forms rich meadow land. W and turnips are also cultivated. T. Levett Prinsep, Esq., is and owner of nearly the whole township.

The manor anciently belonged to the Curzons, and p through 15 generations of that family. Their original estates after, the Norman Conquest, were computed at four knights' of considerable value in mediæval times—but their nam prominently in any of the stirring events of the period. R educated for the Church, and was subsequently raised to Innocent III. He was for some time papal legate at P crusade against the doctrines of the Albigenses, and he died at in 1218. A descendant of the same family, Joyce Curzon, w imbibed the doctrines of the Reformation, and was burnt s field, in 1557, for heresy.

The long line of Curzons terminated in an heiress, M Sackville, fourth Earl of Dorset. She was governess to the E her death, in 1645, both Houses of Parliament ordered honoured by a public funeral in Westminster Abbey. At passed to her husband, and thence to the successive holders, when it was sold to Thomas Prinsep, Esq., from whom it has Levett Prinsep, Esq., the present owner, who assumed the succeeding to the property of his uncle.

The hall is a brick building with stone mullioned w entrance, approached by a fine avenue of elms a quarter of s was formerly surrounded by a moat, part of which still re years previous to 1868 the hall was occupied by a farmer, building was thoroughly restored by the present owner a windows were once rich in heraldic painted glass, and a remain in the dining room. There is a tradition, probabl Mary, the beautiful but unfortunate Queen of Scots, slept Hall; and it is on record that another Royal lady, Henrie Charles I., lodged here one night. The poet Dryden was the hall, and a path under a sloping ridge, well shaded with as Poet Dryden's Walk. In the garden is a very fine specit tree, said to be one of the largest in England.

There is no village, the houses being scattered over the township. The place is distant seven miles N.E. from Lichfield, the same distance N. from Tamworth, $8\frac{1}{2}$ S.W. from Burton-on-Trent, and about a quarter of a mile from the station of its own name on the Midland railway. The church, which stands a little distance from the hall, is dedicated to St. John the Baptist, and dates from the 13th century. In 1239, Sir Robert de Curzon gave the advowson to the Augustinian priory of Repton, and it remained in the possession of that house till the Reformation. The edifice at present consists of chancel, organ chamber, nave, and a western tower containing one bell. Embattled parapets surmount the nave and tower, and at the foot of the latter there springs a gigantic stem of ivy, the branches of which have spread over nearly the whole church. There was formerly a south aisle, a portion of the arcade of which may be seen built up in the wall. The fabric was repaired in 1619, and again in 1701, and underwent a thorough restoration in 1868, when an organ chamber was added, the nave and chancel reseated with oaken benches and stalls, and a pulpit of Caen stone erected. The ancient font remains, but there are neither sedilias nor piscinas. There are alabaster monuments to various members of the Curzon family dating from the middle of the 15th century, to the Hortons of Catton, the Levetts, Prinseps, Gisbornes, and other local families, and the Horton arms are emblazoned in a window on the north side of the nave. Above the south door is a circular window in memory of the Hon. Mrs. Curzon, erected by her mother, Lady Wilmot Horton. In the centre is a monogram, E.I.C., surrounded by a wreath of forget-me-nots, and the texts—"The Lord gave," 1821; "The Lord hath taken away," 1866. The traceried head of the east window bears a representation of the Last Supper, inserted in 1854, and some of the other windows are also filled with stained glass.

The benefice is a vicarage, in the gift of the Bishop of Lichfield, and held by the Right Rev. Thomas Nettleship Staley, D.D., late Bishop of Honolulu. It is valued in the King's Book at £5, but the present income is £489 net, derived from tithes and the rent of glebe land.

Just without the churchyard, on the south-east side, is an ancient British tumulus, measuring 12 feet in height and 120 feet in circumference. The late Thos. Prinsep, Esq., in the early years of the present century, commenced operations for its removal, but as the excavations brought to light a quantity of human remains the work was discontinued, and the mound planted with trees.

Edingale is a village situated on the border line of Derbyshire and Staffordshire, and partly in the parish of Croxall. It is 10 miles distant from Burton-on-Trent and Lichfield, and $5\frac{1}{2}$ from Tamworth. Croxall Parish School adjoins this village.

Mrs. Booth, of Oakley, who died in 1871, left by will the sum of £600, the interest thereof she directed to be distributed by the vicar and churchwardens of Croxall, annually on the 1st December, amongst poor widows, inhabitants for the time being of that part of Edingale which lies within the county of Derby.

CATTON is a township lying on the east bank of the Trent, and adjoining Croxall on the north. It embraces an area of 1,131 acres, the whole of which belongs to Mrs. A. T. Anson-Horton, who is also lady of the manor. Its ratable value is returned at £1,533, and the population in 1891 was 131. The soil varies, but is chiefly red marl; the lower lands of the valley are mostly in meadow. There was formerly a village with two alehouses, but nothing now remains of it except the name Town Meadow, which was doubtlessly the common property of the villagers.

The earliest mention of Catton occurs in Domesday Book, wherein the name is written Chetun. Siward held the manor in Edward the Confessor's time, and the Conqueror transferred it to Nigel de Albini. Catton afterwards passed to the Saint Amands, but there is little of interest attaching to these early owners. In the early years of the 15th century the estate was purchased by Roger Horton, who married Alice, daughter of John St Pierre, of Coole Pilate, in Cheshire, and by this marriage obtained that property. Coole Pilate remained with the Hortons till 1740, when that branch became extinct. The original family was Horton-by-Malpas, county Chester, whence they came. During the Civil War the Hortons of Catton held staunchly for the king, but Colonel Horton, a member of a branch of this family, of Northamptonshire, was an officer in the Cromwellian Army, and was one of those who were appended to the death warrant of Charles I.

Catton descended in the male line of the family through three generations, to the late Eusebius Horton, Esq., and at his death he left his eldest daughter, Anne Beatrix, wife of Sir Robert John Vane, who assumed the additional name of Horton. Her ladyship, with her husband, died in 1871, when Catton passed to her eldest son, Sir Wilmot Horton, fourth baronet. The late Rev. Sir Geo. Lewis Vane, baronet, succeeded his brother, the fourth baronet, in 1880, and in 1887, the estate passed to his niece, Mrs. Anson, widow of Sir John Anson, of Potter Hanworth, Lincolnshire, who assumed the name of Horton.

The present hall, a large building of brick, erected about the middle of the last century, stands in a well-wooded park which skirts the river. It contains some very fine specimens of oak and other forest trees. A stream, standing near the hall, measures 25 feet 6 inches in girth at its widest part from the ground.

A church was built at Catton about the year 1100 by the monks of Eborac, and was given to the Clunian Priory of Tutbury in Staffordshire. In 1534, for some reason or other transferred to the Priory of Repton. This church was dedicated to St. Nicholas, was rebuilt, or more properly re-edified, by Christopher Horton before the year 1650, and re-dedicated to the Virgin Mary. The second edifice, having become utterly ruinous, was taken down in 1892, and a new hall was built. Catton remained without its chapel till 1892, when a new chapel was erected at the sole cost of Mrs. Anson-Horton. It is built of brick and consists of chancel and nave, with south porch and vestry. The bells and bell have been preserved, and will perform their respective offices.

OAKLEY is a small township, locally situated within the parish of Croxall, but for ecclesiastical and poor-law purposes it forms part of the parish of Croxall. It contains 677½ acres of land, owned chiefly by Howard F. Parnall (lord of the manor), and Mrs. Anson-Horton, of Catton Hall. The Croxall road passes through the township, and the station for Croxall is at Oakley. The soil is sand and gravel; ratable value £3,382. There are many houses and these are scattered over the township. The place is distant 1½ N.N.W. from Tamworth.

There were formerly several tumuli or barrows in the neighbourhood, of which only one now remains. In 1874 three ancient British urns were discovered in a gravel pit four feet below the surface, and are now deposited in the Museum.

DALBURY-LEES.

Dalbury-Lees is a parish and township consisting of the two places named, comprising an area of 1,172 acres; ratable value, £1,960; and population, 177. It is in the hundred of Appletree, petty sessional division and county court district of Derby, poor law union of Burton, rural district of Repton, and deanery of Longford.

The soil is marl, and is chiefly in pasture, but wheat, oats, and turnips are also grown. The principal landowners are Mrs. Cotton, Etwall Hall (lady of the manor); R. W. Chandos-Pole, Esq.; Col. Coke; Frank Spilsbury, Esq., Findern; Godfrey F. Meynell, Esq., Meynell Langley; Rev. Philip Gell, Buxted, Sussex; White's trustees; Mr. Richardson, Mr. Wm. Radford, and Mr. John Brassington.

At the time of the Domesday Survey the manor of Dalbury, on which there was a church, belonged to Henry de Ferrers, under whom it was held by one Robert, supposed to have been the ancestor of the Dunnes, who were in possession a little later. A portion, two oxgangs, pertained to the Abbey of Burton. In 1281 Robert de Holland had a grant of free warren over Dalbury and Dalbury-Lees. The manor remained with this family for some time, and then reverted to the Crown. In the reign of Elizabeth it was granted to Sir John Port, whose daughter and co-heiress married Sir Thomas Gerard. Sir Thomas, who was accused of favouring a design to deliver Mary, Queen of Scots, out of her confinement, was committed to the tower, and to purchase his liberty was compelled to mortgage his estates for a large sum of money. Gervase Sleigh, who died in 1641, held the manors of Dalbury and Dalbury Lees. He was succeeded by his son, Sir Samuel Sleigh, whose eldest daughter and co-heiress brought these manors to her husband, James Cheetham. Subsequently, on the extinction of this line, this property reverted to Rowland Cotton, who had married the other co-heiress of Sir Samuel Sleigh.

Dalbury is a small village $1\frac{1}{2}$ miles N. of Etwall and six miles W. of Derby. Etwall is the nearest railway station. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is an ancient edifice of stone, picturesquely mantled with ivy, and consists of chancel, nave, north aisle, and a low tower on the west gable containing two bells. The church was rebuilt in the early English period, but nearly all the characteristic features of the style have been obliterated by subsequent restorations. The arch supporting the turret within the church is of that date. The fabric was repaired in 1629, and more extensively restored and enlarged by the addition of the north aisle in 1844, at a cost of £250. There is some modern stained glass, and in a lancet window on the south side of the nave is a figure of St. Michael, which is evidently of very early date. The font is also ancient, but its richly-carved oak cover is modern. On the north wall of the chancel is a tablet to the memory of the Rev. Charles Evelyn Cotton, B.C.L., who died in 1857, and is buried in the family vault at Etwall. He was for fifty years rector of this parish. The registers date from 1545. The living is a rectory, in the gift of Lady Palliser and Mrs. Stewart, worth £210 yearly, and held by the Rev. John Joseph Wardale, B.A., Jesus College, Cambridge. There are 47 acres of glebe, and the tithe rent-charge is £187.

Lees is a small scattered village two miles N. from Dalbury, and six miles W. from Derby. A school was erected here by the late rector, the Rev. James Cotton; a chancel was added to it subsequently, and Divine service is held in it. A Primitive Methodist chapel was erected in 1835, but it is not now used.

Rook Hill is an ancient farmhouse, seated on an eminence, a quarter of a mile N. of the church. It is the property of Col. Coke, and occupied by Mr. John Massey. Dalbury Woodhouse, another ancient farmstead, is the residence of Mr. William Bainbrigge. The Manor Farm House, in the occupation of Mr. John Hodgkinson, also bears marks of antiquity.

Dalbury Lees is united with Trusley for the election of a district councillor.

DARLEY ABBEY.

This parish consists of the township of its own name, containing 325 acres of land, lying on the bank of the Derwent, just beyond the borough boundary. It was formerly a chapelry under St. Alkmund's, Derby. It is now ecclesiastically independent, but is included in that parish for all civil purposes. Walter Evans, Esq., M.A., J.P., is lord of the manor and principal landowner.

An abbey, dedicated to the Blessed Virgin, was founded here, between the years 1161 and 1170, by Hugh, dean of Derby. The inmates were monks of the Augustinian order, known also, from the colour of their habit, as Black Canons; who had been located for some few years at St. Helen's, Derby. Hugh, who seems to have been dean of the College of All Saints, gave to Albinus, the abbot, land in Darley, whereon to erect an abbey; and he endowed it with his patrimonial estate in Derby, together with the advowson of the church of St. Peter and all its appurtenances. This grant was subsequently confirmed by the burgesses of Derby, and also by Walter Durdent, Bishop of Lichfield. Robert de Ferrers was a munificent benefactor to the abbey; and many others, in their pious zeal, added very considerably to the endowment. There belonged to the abbey upwards of a dozen manors and numerous lands and tenements in various parts of the county; and the canons possessed, in addition, the churches of St. Michael, St. Peter, and St. Werburgh (Derby), Crich, Mackworth, Pentrich, Ashover, Bolsover, Scarscliffe, South Winfield, and Uttoxeter, in Staffordshire.

The income derived from these possessions was spent in the maintenance of the poor, for monasteries were asylums for the destitute and unfortunate, where the outcast and homeless ever found sympathy and relief. They further served as inns for the wayfarer, who heard from afar the sound of the vesper bell, inviting him to repose and devotion, and who might sing his matins with the morning star and go on his way rejoicing. In those rough old days brute force rather than law held sway, and the monasteries were the humanizing mediators between feudal tyranny and serfdom.

When the commissioners of Henry VIII. visited Darley, the brotherhood consisted of the abbot and thirteen monks, whose clear yearly revenue was estimated at £251 13s. 5d., equal in purchasing power to about £2,000 of present money. The abbey was surrendered on the 22nd October, 1539; and shortly afterwards the buildings were dismantled, and the materials sold, on very indulgent terms, to Robert Sacheverell, Esq. The site was granted to Sir William West, who constructed himself a residence out of the conventual buildings, and in 1574 his son sold it to John Bullock, whose family resided here for the greater part of a century. It belonged for some time to the Godbeheres, and then to the Wolleys, who built a hall on the bank of the Derwent in 1727. Subsequently it was purchased by an ancestor of the present owner.

The only portion of the abbey now remaining is St. Sythe's (Osythes?) chapel, a dilapidated building, a portion of which is occupied as a dwelling-house.

The village stands near the Derwent, about one mile N. from Derby. On the river bank are an extensive cotton factory and paper mill, which give employment to a considerable number of the inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Matthew, was erected and endowed, in 1819, by the late Walter Evans, Esq., for the use of his workpeople. It is a handsome edifice of stone, in the Gothic style, consisting of chancel, nave, transepts, south porch, and west tower, with battlements and pinnacles, containing one bell. It was restored by Walter Evans, Esq., in 1886, when a new oak pulpit, oaken pews, and an organ were added. The east window is a memorial of Mrs. Evans, who died in 1891, and of her only child Arthur, who died in 1870. There are also two stained glass windows in the transept. Above the communion table is a handsome marble reredos. The living is a vicarage, worth £300 per annum (with residence), in the gift of Walter Evans, Esq., and held by the Rev. Charles Brittan, M.A. (St. John's College, Cambridge), and rural dean of Duffield.

The School was erected by Mr. Evans in 1826. It is a large, two-storey building, with a house at each end for the master and mistress. There are three departments, with a total average attendance of 186. The Wesleyans are allowed the use of the boys' room on Sundays for religious services.

DERBY HILLS.

This is an extra-parochial liberty, consisting of several co about seven miles south from Derby and one mile east from T 316 acres of land, with a ratable value of £413. The soil is c sand and clay, and yields in the rotation system wheat, ba and mangolds. The principal landowners are Earl Cowper, lord of the manor, and Sir Vauncey Harpur Crewe, Bart.

The chief inhabitants are Philip Shawcross, farmer and Derby Hills House; Geo. Adcock, farmer, overseer, income assessor; and Thomas Dexton, market gardener.

OAKTHORPE AND DONISTHORPE.

embattled, and contains one bell. The interior is seated with oak benches to accommodate 600, and in consequence of a grant from the Incorporated Society for Building and Repairing Churches, 400 seats are free and unappropriated. On the north wall is a tablet, inscribed. "A.D. MDCCCXXXVIII. The Marquis of Hastings granted to the minister of this church and his successors a rent-charge of £30 per annum for ever, secured on certain lands in the parish of Ashby-de-la-Zouch, in order that there might be at all times a second service, together with a sermon or lecture after the same on the Lord's day." Another tablet, dated 1840, records that "a certain piece of meadow land in Oakthorpe, containing 1 acre 1 rood 7 perches or thereabouts, has been given for the furtherance on the principles of the Church of England of the religious education of the children of the poor resident in that hamlet." The district or parish allotted to the church embraces the joint township and part of Ashby Wolds in Leicestershire, comprising a total area of 2,027 acres, with a population of 3,200. The living is a vicarage, worth £214 per annum net, with residence, in the gift of the Bishop of Southwell, and held since 1885 by the Rev. E. B. Lavies, A.K.C.

The Primitive Methodists and the Methodist New Connexion have chapels in Donisthorpe. That belonging to the latter sect is a neat structure of brick, with Sunday school attached, erected in 1873, at a cost of £1,500, to seat 350. The National School was built in 1840, at the sole expense of Lady Cave. There are two departments, mixed and infants, which have accommodation for 82, and an average attendance of 80. There is another school at Moira, attended by about 400 children.

Coal is extensively worked by the Donisthorpe Colliery Co. The shafts are sunk to a depth of 285 yards, and five seams, varying in thickness from 4ft. to 14ft., are worked at present. Limestone is abundant on the neighbouring wolds, and is extensively quarried and burnt for building and agricultural purposes.

CHARITIES.—Louisa Rosamond Sophia Cave Browne Cave, who died in 1847, left the sum of £45, the interest thereof to be distributed yearly amongst the aged poor who are regular attendants at church, at the discretion of the minister for the time being. A rent-charge of 10s. on Old Hall farm, left by Miss Cave, is distributed on St. Thomas's Day.

EGGINTON.

This is a parish and township containing 2,291½ acres of land, and 396 inhabitants. Its ratable value is £10,105. Sir Edward Oswald Every, Bart. (a minor), is lord of the manor and principal landowner. The Burton-on-Trent Corporation have 310 acres of land in the parish, and Sir Oswald Mosley, Rolleston Hall, Staffs.; Rev. J. C. Lamb, Sir Francis Burdett, Bart., Foremark Hall; Mrs. Watson, Willington; and the Rev. Edward F. Every have also small estates here.

Eggington is in the hundred of Morleston and Litchurch; electoral division of Etwall; petty sessional division of Derby; poor law union and county court district of Burton-on-Trent; and deanery of Longford. The river Dove passes through the parish, and is here crossed on the Derby and Burton-on-Trent Road—the Ryknield street of the Romans—by a stone bridge of three arches, called Monks' Bridge, having been most probably erected by the monks of Tutbury. A little further down at the southern extremity of the parish, the Dove unites with the Trent. There are three railways within the parish, the North Staffordshire, Great Northern, and the Midland. The two former have a joint station about 1½ miles from the village. A portion of the Grand Trunk canal also lies within the parochial boundary. The soil is sand and gravel and is chiefly in pasture. The Burton-on-Trent corporation has an extensive sewage farm and works here, occupying about 560 acres, of which 310 acres are in this parish.

The manor of Eghintune (Egginton) was held at the time of the Domesday Survey by Geoffrey Alselin, and it had then a priest and church. The heiress of Alselin married a Bardulf, and it was held in moieties under this family by Amalric de Gasci and William Fitzralph. The latter was the founder of Dale Abbey, and gave this manor, or the greater part of it, to his nephew, William de Grendon, in exchange for Stanley, near Dale Abbey. Margaret de Grendon, his daughter and heiress, married Robert Wakelin, and the result of this marriage was two daughters, Margaret and Ermentrude, between whom the property was divided. Margaret married Sir John Chandos, and Ermentrude Sir William Stafford, and Chandos disposed of his share of Egginton to Stafford. Sir Robert Stafford, son of Sir William, who died in the reign of Edward II., left five daughters, amongst whom a partition of the Stafford property at Eggington, Mugginton, and Radbourne was made. The manor of Egginton appears to have been divided amongst four of the coheiresses. One daughter married Thomas de Stanton, whose daughter and heiress in 1359 granted her fourth share of the manor to Sir John Chandos, the celebrated warrior. This moiety subsequently descended to the Poles. Another share passed to the Bothes, and thence to the Popes, and to the Blounts.

There was a subordinate manor, originally known as the manor of Heath-houses, afterwards Hargate, which was held by the ancient family of Lathbury from a very early period. It remained in this family till the beginning of the 16th century, when Anne, daughter and sole heiress of Thomas Lathbury, married Robert Leigh. Two of the above-mentioned shares were also purchased by the Leighs. On the death of Sir Henry Leigh in the reign of James I., his estate at Egginton passed to his daughter and coheir, Anne, the wife of Simon Every, of Chard, Somerset, who was created a baronet in 1641, and it still remains with this family. The Every's claim to be a branch of the noble house of Every, of Norman extraction. Eggington Hall, their seat, is a brick mansion erected about the middle of last century on the site of one previously destroyed by a fire. It is pleasantly situated on the bank of the Dove, and stands within its own grounds, about 50 acres in extent.

The village of Eggington is small and straggling, and stands a little off the Burton and Derby road, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles N.E. from the former, $7\frac{1}{2}$ miles from the latter, and $1\frac{1}{2}$ miles from Eggington station. The church, dedicated to St. Wilfrid, is an ancient Gothic edifice, consisting of chancel, with vestry and organ chamber on the north side, nave, north and south aisles, and a low western tower. Of the church that stood here in Norman times not a vestige remains. The east window of five lights contains some fragments of ancient glass. The sedile and piscina remain in the south wall of the chancel, and the almshouse niche on the opposite side. The aisle arcades are apparently of different dates, the one side having circular columns and the other clustered ones. High up in the wall of the north aisle is carved—"1593. R.S., W.K."—which probably refers to some restoration or repairs at that time. In the south aisle are several low recesses, in one of which lies the recumbent effigy of a lady holding a heart between her hands. The church was restored in 1892, at a cost of £1,600. All the plaster has been removed from the walls, and the stones pointed; new roofs of oak and lead have been placed on the nave and north aisle; the chancel ceiling lined with oak; and the church refloored. Five stone arches have been placed over the windows, and a stained glass window inserted on the south side of the chancel to the memory of the Rev. R. Mosley, late rector of the parish. During the progress of the restoration a sedilium, piscina, and almshouse were discovered in the south aisle, showing that there had formerly been an altar here. There is in the chancel a picture of the Holy Family, after Murillo, copied by Henderson, and presented to the church by Joseph Leigh, Esq., of Belmont, Cheshire, in 1833; and also an old oak chair, inscribed: "1686. T.M." There are monuments in the chancel to Sir Simon Every, the first baronet, and Sir Henry, the second baronet; and several tablets and slabs to other members of the same family and to the Mosleys. The tower contains three bells, two dated respectively 1615 and 1778. The third bears the pre-Reformation inscription: "Ihc. Ave Maria gracia plena Dominus tecum" (Hail Mary full of grace, the Lord is with thee.) In the report of the Church Goods Commissioners, drawn up in the 6th Edward VI., it is said that two of the bells that had belonged to this church were sold in 1549 to "the reparynge of the Monks bridge, wch is so farre in decay that the township is not able to amend the same." The registers date from 1561.

The living is a rectory, which was at an early period divided into two moieties. One of these moieties (that is half of the great tithes) of Eggington was appropriated by Bishop Norbury to Dale Abbey, to enable the monks the better to exercise hospitality, for numbers flocked to the abbey every day for food. The right of presentation was exercised in turns by the holders of the five moieties of the manor; and the present patrons are Sir H. Every, Bart. (two turns), R. C. Pole, Esq. (two turns), and Joseph Leigh, Esq. (one turn). The half-rectory is valued in the King's Book at £3 2s. 8d.; the living is now worth £300 a year, with residence, and is held by the Rev. J. C. Lamb, M.A.

The school, which was erected in 1857, is under the management of a School Board, by whom it was enlarged in 1891. There are about 84 children on the books.

CHARITIES.—Thomas Bugbury, in 1723, left a rent-charge of 52s. to be distributed in twelve penny loaves every Sunday in the church. William Newton, in 1820, left £2,000 three per cent. annuities for the benefit of the poor of his native town. The dividend, £30 half-yearly, is distributed in sums varying from £1 to £5, preference being given to such as are aged. There is also a sum of £1,000 belonging to the parish, invested in London and Greenwich Preference Stock and Consols, the dividends of which are applied to the relief of the rates. The Rev. John Leigh, late rector of the parish, by will dated 24th May, 1852, bequeathed the sum of £300, the interest thereof to be distributed amongst such of the poor as are most regular in their attendance at the parish church and shall appear deserving of the same.

ELVASTON.

This parish comprises the hamlets of Elvaston, Ambaston, and Thurlston, containing 2,571 acres of land, belonging chiefly to the Earl of Harrington, who is lord of the manor. Mr. Charles Severn owns 23 acres, and Milne's Exors. have also some land. The parish, which lies on the south bank of the river Derwent, four miles S.E. from Derby and $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles from Borrowash station, on the Midland railway, is in the hundred of Morleston and Litchurch, petty sessional division and county court district of Derby, union and rural district of Shardlow, and deanery of Melbourne. The ratable value is £5,424, and the population 519, who are chiefly employed in agriculture.

The three hamlets that conjointly form the parish are mentioned as separate manors in Domesday Book, wherein they are written Ælwoðdestun, Emboldestune, and Torulfestune, and were all held by Geoffrey Alselin, or Hanselyn. This family ended in an heiress who brought the manor to the Bardolphs, who held it till the reign of Henry VI., when it passed to the Blounts, Lords Mountjoy. From this family it was purchased about the middle of the 16th century by Sir Michael Stanhope, ancestor of the present owner. William Stanhope was a distinguished soldier in the reigns of George I. and George II., and was engaged in several diplomatic missions of great importance. For these services he was raised to the peerage in 1730, by the title of Baron Harrington of Harrington, Co. Northampton, and subsequently held the office of principal Secretary of State until a change of Ministry took place in 1742, when he was elevated to the dignity of Viscount Petersham and Earl of Harrington. The present earl, the Right Hon. Charles Augustus Stanhope, is the eldest son of Charles Wyndham, the seventh earl, who succeeded to the honours and estates on the death of his cousin, Sydney Seymour Hyde, sixth earl, in 1866. The castle is a handsome modern mansion, in the Domestic Gothic style, situated in a well-wooded park of about 140 acres. The grounds were formerly "a triumph of landscape gardening," but they are now shorn of their beauty, and the Italian garden, except for its statuary, is no longer worthy of its name. At the entrance to one of the shrubberies is a pair of lofty wrought-iron gates, elaborately ornamented with scroll work. These gates were brought from Paris, and are said to have belonged to Napoleon Buonaparte.

Close to the castle is the church, dedicated to St. Bartholomew, an ancient and venerable edifice, recently denuded of its mantle of ivy. It consists of chancel, nave, south aisle, shallow north transept, or chapel, and a west tower, and exhibits in its architecture the Early English Decorated and Perpendicular styles. The chancel is divided from the nave by a very fine old oak screen, and another one, which formerly enclosed the "Chapel of Our Lady," now screens off the Stanhope pew. The east window is filled with beautiful stained glass to the memory of Jane, Countess of Harrington, who died in 1824. On the north side of the chancel, under an arched recess, is a costly and beautifully finished monument, bearing the effigies of Sir John Stanhope, who died in 1610, and his lady. On the opposite wall is the recumbent figure of Algernon Russell Gayleard Stanhope, who died in 1847, aged nine years, executed in white marble by Westmacott. On a large brass against the north wall is represented Seymour Sydney Hyde, sixth Earl of Harrington, in his academical robes. He died in 1866, shortly before attaining his majority. The shallow transept, or chapel, on the north side of the nave was erected to receive the monument of Sir John Stanhope, who died in 1638. The figure of the knight, in half-recumbent position, was grievously mutilated by Sir John Gell during the Commonwealth. Some attempt has been made to restore it, but it still bears traces of the injuries it received. The widow subsequently married the mutilator of her husband's monument. Another handsome marble monument, on the north side of the nave, representing Grief, is to the memory of Charles, third Earl of Harrington, and the monument of the fifth Earl, who died in 1862, occupies a place in the family pew. A tablet on the north wall records that "William Piggin, citizen and plaisterer of London, died Vth day of June, 1621, who by will gave £250 to buy land, and the profits thereof yearly to be distributed amongst the poore of the three townes belonging to this parish of Elvaston by the churchwardens and some of his nearest kindred, and £10 more he gave as a stock for ever, and the yearly profits thereof to remain to the disposers of the said poor's money, to be spent on a drinking at the distributing thereof." The tower, which is very lofty, contains four bells.

The church of Elvaston was, in the early part of the 14th century, appropriated to the priory of Shelford. At the Reformation the great tithes and patronage were granted to Sir Michael Stanhope, and they still remain in the possession of this family. The living, a vicarage, worth £300 a year, is held by the Rev. A. R. Goldie, M.A.

The village of Elvaston is pleasantly situated on the outskirts of the park, four miles S.E. from Derby, and 2½ miles from Borrowash station on the Midland railway. The National school is here, and here also are the Almshouses erected by the Countess of Harrington in 1862. The latter form an imposing three-storey block, containing twelve large rooms. Inscribed on a stone in the front is "Refuge for the poor." Only three of the rooms at present have occupants. The least day is the Sunday nearest to September 4.

Ambaston is a small village and hamlet containing about 850 acres of land. The monks of Dale had considerable possessions and a Grange here. Thulston or Thurlston, another hamlet and village containing about 960 acres, formerly belonged to Darley Abbey, and there was also a Grange for the accommodation of the lay brothers who looked after the interests of the Abbey. After the dissolution of religious houses these monastic lands came into the possession of the Windsors, who appropriated the chapel belonging to each Grange "to their own proper use." Both chapels are mentioned in the Inventory of Church Goods, taken in the reign of Edward VI., but nothing remains to indicate the spot where each stood.

ETWALL.

Etwall parish comprises the townships of Etwall, Bearwardcote, and Bar-maston, which together contain 3,578 acres of land, and had in 1891 a population of 892. It is in the hundred of Appletree, petty sessional division and county court district of Derby, poor law union of Burton-on-Trent, and deanery of Longford.

In the township of Etwall there are 2,011 acres of land under assessment, of which the ratable value is £5,667. The inhabitants, in 1891, numbered 641. The soil is strong land, clayey in places, and gravelly on the common. The latter, containing 834 acres, was enclosed in 1797. The farms are chiefly devoted to dairy purposes, but wheat, turnips, and mangolds are grown to a small extent. The principal landowners are Mrs. Cotton (who is also lady of the manor), Etwall Hall; the trustees of Sir John Port's charity; Rev. R. G. Buckston, Sutton-on-the-Hill; the vicar of Etwall in right of his church; Messrs. Mosley; Chas. E. Newton, Esq., Mickleover Manor; Mr. T. F. H. Measham, Etwall; Mr. John Wall, Etwall; Mrs. E. Jerram, Park Hill, Normanton; Mrs. Watson, Willington; W. E. T. Cox, Esq., Spondon Hall; the Burton-on-Trent Corporation; Sir E. O. Every, Bart.; and Mr. Thos. Elnor, Heaxgreave Park, Southwell, Notts. Under the Local Government Act of 1894, six parish councillors have been assigned to Etwall, which, with Bearwardcote, elects one rural district councillor.

The manor of Etwelle, at the time of the Domesday Survey, was held by Saswallo, ancestor of the Shirleys, under Henry de Ferrers, and there was then both a church and a priest. It soon passed away from this family, and in the 13th and 14th centuries was held by the Riboeffs. Walter de Riboeff, in the reign of Henry III., held half a knight's fee (300 acres) at Etwall under Robert de Ferrers, at a rental of twenty shillings. After the forfeiture of the Ferrers' lands the Dukes of Lancaster became the superior lords, under whom the Riboeffs continued to hold Etwall as part of the manor of Tutbury. In 1370 the manor of Etwall was granted to the priory of Beauvale, in Nottinghamshire, with which house it remained till the dissolution of monasteries, when it was given by Henry VIII. to Sir John Port, together with the rectory and advowson of the vicarage. Sir John Port was one of the justices of the King's Bench, and he married Jane, daughter and heiress of John Fitzherbert, of Etwall. Sir John Port was succeeded by his son of the same name, founder of the Etwall Hospital, and it passed thence by the marriage of the eldest daughter of the latter to Sir Thomas Gerard. The Gerards have always remained true to the old faith, and the family suffered severely in the religious persecutions under Queen Elizabeth, and subsequently. Sir Thomas, it appears, in the early part of Elizabeth's reign, in his endeavour to escape the penalties to which Catholics were subject, attended the reformed services in the church, but not the sacraments. On one occasion his younger brother was on a visit to the Hall, and having a sudden attack of gout, he was compelled to stay over the Sunday. Sir Thomas Gerard, knowing that his house was closely watched by Elizabeth's spies, insisted on his brother, notwithstanding the latter's protestations to the contrary, being carried in his chair into the family pew in Etwall Church. "But the younger Gerard," says Dr. Cox, who tells the story, "though disabled in his legs, was quite a match for his brother. No sooner had the minister commenced the reformed service than Gerard, at the top of his voice, commenced chanting the psalms in the vulgate, and the vicar, by the time he was well into the third psalm, gave up the rivalry of tongues, and insisted on the bearers carrying him back to the Hall." Sir Thomas was twice confined to the Tower, once for three years and subsequently for two years, and this was one of the charges against him.

The manor continued in the possession of the Gerards till 1641, when it was sold to Sir Edward Moseley, of whom it was purchased five years later by Sir Samuel Sleigh. Mary, only daughter of Sir Samuel, by his third wife, married Rowland Cotton, Esq., of Bellaport, Shropshire. He was succeeded by his son William, whose son and heir of the same name dying unmarried, the estate passed to his sister and coheir, Elizabeth, the widow of Joseph Green, Esq. This lady by royal licence, in 1820, assumed for herself and her issue the surname and arms of Cotton only. Her eldest son, Major-General Cotton, died in 1842 without issue, and was succeeded by his brother, the Rev. Charles Evelyn Cotton, rector of Dalbury. He died in 1857, leaving, besides three daughters, a son, Major Rowland Hugh Cotton, whose widow is the present lady of the manor.

Etwall Hall is a fine old baronial mansion, said to date from the 11th century, but the house as it now stands appears to be chiefly Elizabethan. The gardens are extensive, and are in the old stiff Dutch style.

The village is pleasantly situated on the Derby and Uttoxeter road, six miles S.W. from the former, and about half-a-mile from Etwall station on the Great Northern railway. It presents the appearance of extreme respectability; the houses are modern and of a superior class, and seem altogether the abode of ease and comfort. The water supply is good, and it is lighted with gas by the Mickleover and Etwall Gas Light & Coke Co., Ltd., established in 1879, with a capital of £9,000 in £10 shares. There are ten public lamps, the cost of which is defrayed by contributions and public subscriptions. The church, dedicated to St. Helen, is an ancient edifice, comprising chancel with north chapel, nave, north aisle, south porch (rebuilt in 1893), and a low embattled tower at the west end containing three bells. Two of the arches of the north aisle, low and semi-circular, belonged to the old Norman church, the third arch at the east end is lofty and pointed, and occupies the place of two Norman ones. The prevailing style of the rest of the church is the Perpendicular of the 15th and 16th centuries, and much of this was probably effected by Sir John Port in 1545, after the building had been very considerably damaged by a storm. It underwent considerable repairs and unfortunate alterations in 1805, when the old Norman chancel arch was taken down, and the church ceiled throughout with plaster. Many of these churchwarden improvements were happily removed in 1881, when the church underwent a thorough restoration. A panelled oak ceiling has been substituted for the plaster one, the nave and aisle have been seated with open benches of pitchpine, and the choir chapel with carved oak stalls of a neat design. The organ was built by Abbott, of Leeds, in 1882, and two additional stops added in 1893. At this time also the old windows of the nave and south aisle were restored. The east window is of three lights and painted, and high up on each side is a small square-headed one, an intrusion certainly never contemplated by the mediæval architect. The piscina niche remains in the south wall, and near it in a recess is the beautiful altar tomb of Sir John Port, founder of Etwal Hospital and Repton School. On the front are three shields of arms with quatrefoils; above is a square canopy supported on clustered columns. Under these are mural brasses representing Sir John, his two wives, and five children. Surrounding the cornice are the arms of the Port family. The inscription is as follows:—"Under this tombelyeth buried the Boodye of Syr John Porte, Knyght sonne & heyre unto Syr John Porte, one of the Justices of ye Kynga benche at Westmynst', Elsebeth & dorothe wyves to the same Sr John Porte the sonne whych sonne dyed the syxt day of June Anno dni 1557." The chapel on the north side of the chancel was the Port chapel, and is divided from the chancel by two arches. Under one of these is the altar tomb of Sir John Port, justice of the King's Bench. On the top lie the much mutilated effigies of Sir John and his two wives. On the side and ends of the tomb are the arms of Port impaling those of Fitzherbert and Trafford, the families of his two wives. Another Port memorial is a slab with brasses, commemorating Henry Port and Elizabeth, his wife. The former died in 1512. The figure of the husband has disappeared, but that of the wife remains, and below, in two groups, are the figures of nine sons and eight daughters. An old slab, bearing two incised figures and a partially legible inscription, is built into the south wall of the chancel; and on the opposite side is a handsome marble monument surmounted by an urn, to Bridget, second wife of Edward Mainwaring, and also Mary, his eldest daughter, 1749. The Cotton family are commemorated in a three-light window in the north aisle, and the Myring family by one on the opposite side. The pulpit is a handsome piece of marble work, and near it is a brass lectern of very neat design.

The church of Etwall was given by Roger, Archbishop of York, in the latter half of the 12th century to the Abbey of Welbeck, and from that time till the Reformation the canons of that house held the rectory, and one of them officiated as vicar. In 1536, the rectory was valued at £10, and the vicarage at £8. After the dissolution of the abbey the rectory and advowson passed with the manor to Sir John Port, thence to the Gerards. The patronage was subsequently sold to Sir Edward Moseley, from whom it was purchased by Sir Samuel Sleight, and passed thence by marriage to the Cottons. It has since changed hands by sale several times, and now belongs to H. G. Tomlinson, Esq. The living is worth £350 net, derived from 104 acres of glebe and the tithes of hay, lambs, and wool. An acre of land has been recently purchased and added to the burial ground.

On the north side of the churchyard is the Hospital founded by Sir John Port in 1556. It consists of a neat block of cottages, 16 in number, built of brick, with stone dressings, each having a small garden. The testator devised certain lands in Etwall, Willington, Repton, Egginton, Normanton, and other places for the foundation of a hospital at Etwall for six poor persons, and a Grammar School at Etwall or Repton. The hospital was rebuilt in 1681, and at the same time the number of almsmen was doubled and their weekly allowance augmented in consequence of the increased value of the charity estates. The present yearly income of the charity is £2,500, of which £1,500 is appropriated to Repton Grammar School, £900 to Etwall Hospital, and £100 to Etwall School. There are now 16 almsmen who receive 12s. per week each, and have each a blue cloak on entering. The vicar of Etwall is master of the hospital, for which he receives £250 per annum. The testator appointed Sir John Harpur, Henry, Earl of Huntingdon, Philip, Lord Stanhope, and Sir Thomas Gerard and their heirs for ever governors and superintendents of the hospital and school. The present governors are the Earl of Loudoun, the Earl of Carnarvon, Lord Gerard, and Sir Vauncey Harpur Crewe, Bart. Sir John Port, also by will, bequeathed a yearly rent of 23s. 4d. out of certain lands at Burnaston "to find a perpetual lamp with oil, to be kept for ever burning before the Most Holy and Blessed Sacrament in the parish church of Etwall."

The Wesleyans have a chapel in the village, erected in 1883, at a cost of £1,002, in lieu of an old one built in 1838. It is a handsome building of red brick, relieved with white bricks and stone dressings. It is lighted by 10 pointed windows, and the interior fittings are all of selected pitchpine.

A new Parochial School was erected in 1870 by the governors of Sir John Port's Charity, and £100 is given yearly out of the Etwall estate for its support. The school is a mixed one, and has an average attendance of 116. Adjoining is a neat house for the master.

There are several genteel residences in the parish. Etwall Lodge is a good house, built by the Rev. William Beer in 1812. It now belongs to Sir John Port's Charity, and is occupied by Hugh Sacheverel Bateman, Esq., as a shooting box. The Lawn, in the village, is the residence of George A. Crewe, Esq., and the Grove, another good dwelling, is the residence of Dr. E. Riding.

BEARWARDCOTE is a small village and township containing 450 acres of land belonging chiefly to Charles E. Newton, Esq., Mickleover, who is also lord of the manor. The ratable value is £865, and the population, in 1891, was 29. It is situated about 4½ miles S.W. from Derby.

The manor formerly belonged to the Boningtons. In 1672 it was purchased by William Turner, of Derby, and it was sold by this family to Robert Newton, Esq., who, in 1789, bequeathed his estates to his kinsman, John Leaper, Esq. That gentleman, by Royal licence, took the name of Newton. The old hall, which was last occupied by Mr. Exuperius Turner, was taken down in 1790, but traces of the moat and bridge still remain. Bearwardcote House, the residence of Francis Curzon Newton, Esq., was erected in 1886. Smerrils, a farm in this township, is the property of R. W. Chandos-Pole, Esq., who received it from Mr. Newton, in exchange for other lands, seven or eight years ago. The township pays a modus of £2 0s. 4d. to the vicar of Etwall.

BURNASTON township contains 1,193 acres, ratable value £1,808, and had, in 1891, a population of 222. The soil is strong and chiefly in grass. The principal owners are Robert S. Elliott, Burton-on-Trent; Francis Radford; Thomas R. Dearle; Messrs. Stone & Beck; David Harrison, Old Normanton; Mr. Dutton, William Haynes, and the Exors. of the late John Watson, of Willington.

The earliest mention of this place occurs in Domesday Book, wherein it is written Bernulfestun, doubtlessly so named from its original Saxon proprietor Bernulf. Gamel was the principal proprietor at the time of the Norman Conquest, and during the three succeeding centuries there were several changes of ownership. In the latter part of the 14th century it came into the possession of the Bonningtons; and, in 1672, Ralph Bonnington sold the manor to Sir Samuel Sleigh, of Etwall. At his death it was inherited by his grandson Samuel Chetham, Esq., and afterward devolved on the Cottons who were descended from another daughter of Sir S. Sleigh.

The Old Hall, with the adjoining land, belonged to the Mosleys, from whom it was purchased by Mr. Smith. This gentleman pulled down the old half-timbered house and built the present one on its site. The hall and farm were purchased by the present owner, Mr. Thomas R. Dearle, in 1892.

The village of Burnaston is small and stands a little off the Uttoxeter road, five miles S.W. from Derby. There is a Mission room here in which church service is held every Sunday afternoon.

Burnaston House, two miles S.E. from Etwall, is a handsome mansion, surrounded by attractive sylvan scenery. It is the property of Arthur Rowland Mosley, 6th Dragoons, and the residence of G. D'Arcy Clark, Esq., J.P.

CHARITIES.—The following benefactions are recorded on a board in the church:—"Twenty shillings yearly for ever, payable from a piece of land called Iperoff, belonging to the Rev. Wm.

Heacock, and bequeathed by his ancestor John Saxon. Twenty shillings yearly for ever, payable from house and land at Hilton, bequeathed by Robert Heacock, now belonging to John Kniveton. Several small bequests by the Cotton family and by Mr. Jennings, late vicar, and others, with voluntary additions made to, amounting to £100, was placed on security, the interest thereof to be given yearly to the poor for ever."

Mrs. Beer left £6 yearly to be given to six poor old widows in sums of 20s. each, which is distributed by the trustee, the Rev. R. G. Buckston, of Sutton-on-the-Hill.

FINDERN.

Findern is a parish and township in the hundred of Morleston and Litchurch, electoral division of Etwall, petty sessional division and county court district of Derby, poor law union of Burton-on-Trent, and rural deanery of Melbourne. It comprises an area of 1,740 acres, belonging chiefly to Sir Vauncey Harpur Crewe, Bart., Calke Abbey; Rev. B. W. Spilsbury, Mr. Lazarus Needham, Mrs. Watson, and Mrs. A. E. Edwards. R. W. Chandos-Pole, Esq., is lord of the manor. The soil is various, in parts clay, gravel, light loam, and black peat. It is chiefly in grass; mangel-wurzels and cabbages are also grown. The ratable value of the township is £7,584, and the number of inhabitants 412.

Findern at the time of the Domesday Survey was a berewick of the manor of Mickleover, then held by the Abbot of Burton, to whom it was given by William the Conqueror. The abbot retained his manorial rights till the Reformation. A family named Findern possessed a considerable estate here from an early period. The last male representative of this ancient house was Thomas Findern, who died in 1558, when his sister, Jane, subsequently wife of Sir Richard Harpur, Justice of Common Pleas, became his sole heiress. A descendant of Sir Richard assumed, in 1808, the name and arms of Crewe.

The village is pleasantly situated about 1 mile east of the Burton road, 5 miles S.W. by S. from Derby, and 1½ miles from Repton and Willington station, on the Derby and Birmingham line. The Grand Trunk Canal passes within a short distance. The houses are ranged round a small green. Handloom silk weaving was formerly carried on here to a small extent, but that industry has been discontinued. The Old Hall, recently renovated, stands near the church. It is an oak and plaster structure, but it does not appear to have been at any time a place of much consequence.

Findern was formerly a chapelry of Mickleover, and is mentioned in the Conqueror's grant to Burton Abbey. The old chapel was taken down and the present edifice built on the site in 1862, at a cost of nearly £2,000. It is in the Gothic style, and comprises chancel, nave, north aisle, south porch, and small turret, containing a clock and two bells. It retains the old dedication of All Saints'. The stained-glass windows are by Hardman, of Birmingham, and are memorials of local families. The old chapel contained a monument to a priest and an ancient alabaster slab, bearing the incised figure of a man and a Latin inscription to Isabella Fyndern, wife of Henry de Botham, who have disappeared. An interesting relic has been rebuilt in the wall of the aisle. It is an old tympanum, discovered when the chapel was repaired, bearing in the centre a cross, on each side of which is a human figure, but whether intended for adults or infants it is not known. It is evidently of very early date. The font bears the date 1212. The communion plate, which is beautifully engraved with arabesque designs, is supposed to be the oldest in the county. The church is seated with open ground to the south. The registers commence in 1558. The living is a vicarage, in the gift of, and held by, the Rev. Benjamin M.A., Trin. Coll., Camb. There are about 25 acres of glebe.

There were formerly many Presbyterians in Findern. Dr. A. A. a physician resident at Longlands, was a noted preacher among the Wesleyans in the middle of last century. The Wesleyan Chapel was erected in 1812.

From an eminence near the old mill, twenty-two churches in the neighbourhood of the Cathedral and Breedon Church in Leicestershire, can be seen, and the view also includes Castle Donington and the Peak. There is a mill here, which bears the name of War Fields, where it is supposed some battle or skirmish took place; both cannon balls and human remains have been found.

Potlock is a manor and estate in this township, containing 1,200 acres, belonging to Sir V. H. Crewe, Bart. The manor was held for several centuries by the Toukes who had a mansion house here. In the 14th century it was given to the Finderns, who also had their residence here. There was a church here dedicated to St. Leonard, which was given by William the Conqueror to the Abbey. In 1327, John de Touke, a priest and the last of his family, gave 46s. 8d. out of his manor of Potlock to the supply of the poor to celebrate daily mass in this chapel. Not a vestige of the edifice remains. The foundations were still apparent when the old hall was pulled down.

CHARITIES.—John Wilson Cooke, citizen of London, left by will in 1714 the purchase of a meadow called Blakemore, in Findern, the rent (now £100) to be distributed in bread amongst the poor of this parish on All Hallows and on the 1st of November. In 1714, left by will 16½ acres of land in Skirbeck, Lincolnshire, for the support of a schoolmaster at Findern, to teach the children of the poor of Findern. Willingdon, the present school-house, formerly the old Unitarian Chapel, was purchased in 1812, and a class-room has been recently added at a cost of £100. The school is managed by a committee, consisting of the overseers and churchwardens of the parishes of Willington, Twyford, and Stenson. There are two departments with a total of 95 scholars. John Erpe, in 1712, devised land in Findern, called Lesser Crow, to pay 20s. yearly, viz.:—12s. to the master of Findern School, and 8s. for the purchase of books for the poor. Robert Erpe, of Findern, in 1876, as recorded in the church porch, bequeathed £150, the interest arising therefrom to be paid to widows and aged poor of the parish yearly. This money is invested with the National Savings Funds, and the interest £8 10s. 8d. is distributed as directed.

FOREMARK.

This parish comprises the townships of Foremark and Ingleby in the hundred of Repton and Gresley, petty sessional division of Repton, county court district of Derby, poor law union of Burton-on-Trent, and deanery of Melbourne. The soil is various, chiefly sand, gravel, loam and clay, and oats, wheat, barley, and turnips are the principal crops. The surface is gently undulated and the scenery diversified.

The township of Foremark, $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles S.S.W. from Derby, comprises 1,130 acres of land, and 93 inhabitants. The manor at the time of the Domesday survey belonged to Nigel de Stafford. In the reign of Henry II. it was given by Robert de Ferrers, Earl of Derby, to Bertram de Verdon, in marriage with one of his daughters. It was purchased from the Verdens by Sir Robert Francis, who obtained a confirmation of free warren from the Crown in 1397. The daughter and heiress of William Francis, marrying Thomas Burdett, Esq., of Bramcote, in Warwickshire, who was created a baronet in 1618, it passed into his hands, and still remains in the possession of his descendant. The family claims to be descended from Hugh de Burdett, whose name occurs on the Roll of Battle Abbey. Sir Francis, the fifth baronet, was a well known politician, and married the daughter and coheiress of Thomas Coutts, Esq., a London banker. Both husband and wife died within a few days of each other, and were buried on the same day. The youngest daughter, Angelina Georgina, succeeded to Mr. Coutts' property, and assumed, by Royal licence, the surname of Coutts. She has been identified with innumerable philanthropic works, and, in 1871, was created a peeress as Baroness Burdett Coutts.

Foremark Hall, the seat of Sir Francis Burdett, Bart., is a large mansion of stone, four stories in height, approached by a double flight of stone steps and balustrades, standing in its own spacious grounds and park. It was rebuilt in 1762.

The chapel of Foremark is mentioned as early as 1271, when it was given, together with the mother church of Repton, to the priory of that place. The present church, dedicated to St. Saviour, was built by Sir Francis Burdett in 1662, and consists of chancel, nave, and a low west tower containing four bells. The chancel is separated from the nave by a carved oak screen. The altar, a slab of grey marble on a wooden frame, is enclosed within wrought iron railings. At the west end is a gallery, erected in 1819. On the floor are several memorial stones to the Burdett family. On the outside, over the chancel window, are the Burdett arms, but everything about the edifice, both within and without, is extremely plain. The living is a vicarage worth £102, in the gift of Sir F. Burdett, Bart., and held by the Rev. Thomas Orrell, who is also chaplain of Calke.

Near the river Trent, which forms the northern boundary of the parish, is Anchor Church, a peculiar rocky eminence having the appearance of a building in ruins; it has been excavated into several rooms, supposed by some to have been the work of an anchorite, and by others to have been used as a summer house for fishing.

Ingleby is a township containing 867 acres of land, belonging solely to Sir I. Burdett, Bart. The total ratable value is £1,373, and the number of inhabitants 99. The village is small but pleasantly situated at the foot of a small cliff, seven miles south from Derby. Some few years ago the village boasted an elm tree said to have been 600 years old. It fell to decay and was supplanted by a young one about 15 years ago. Ingleby had formerly its chapel, which is mentioned, with that of Foremark, in 1271. It was still in use in 1650, but ruinous, and a few years later it was taken down and the materials used in the rebuilding of Foremark church.

CHARITIES.—Mary Burdett, by will dated January 5th, 1697, gave £200 vested in land belonging to Sir Francis Burdett, Bart., producing £10 per annum, to be disposed of annually amongst the poor of Foremark, Milton, Repton, or any of them, in clothing poor women, distributing bread on Sundays, paying for schooling, buying bibles and prayer books, or in such other way as her executor, Sir Robert Burdett, Bart., and his heirs shall think to be the greatest charity. Dorothy Burdett, by will dated February 19th, 1717, gave £200, also invested in land belonging to Sir Francis Burdett, producing £10 per annum, to be disposed of in like manner with the addition of Sickenhall and Polesworth, to the former places.

HARTSHORNE.

This parish lies on the borders of Leicestershire, and, with Woodville contains 2,858 acres of land, and 1,878 inhabitants. Ratable value £7,698. The principal landowners are the Earl of Carnarvon, who is also lord of the manor; the Rector of the parish in right of his church; Brunt, Bucknall, & Co., Limited; Hugh Brookes, Esq., Winhill; Thompson's representatives; Exors. of T. Mann field; Lester Biddulph, Esq., Stapenhill; Sir V. H. Crewe, Bart., and Mr. John Mellor.

Hartshorne is in the hundred and police district of Repton and Gresley union and county court district of Ashby-de-la-Zouch; county council election division of Repton and Swadlincote, and deanery of Repton. Under the Parish and District Councils Act the parish is divided into two wards, each of which returns one guardian and one rural district councillor, and Hartshorne and Measham form a new rural district which includes the following parishes: Appleyby, Boundary, Calke, Chilcote, Hartshorne, Measham, Oakthorpe and Donisthorpe, Smisby, Stretton-eu-le-Field, Ticknall, and Willesley.

Coal and iron are said to be abundant, but the former only is worked to a small extent. Large quantities of fire clay are obtained and transported to Birmingham, Sheffield, and other industrial centres.

At the time of the Domesday Survey there were two manors in Heorteshorne, both of which were held by Aluric, under Henry de Ferrers, but their early descent cannot be accurately traced. In the reign of Henry III. two members of a family, styled de Hartshorne, held each half a knight's fee in the parish. The Abbey of Croxden had lands in Hartshorne, as also had the Priory of Repton, together with a moiety of a park. The two manors became known from their situation as Upper Hall and Nether Hall. In 1504 John Ireland held both of them, the former under William Abell and the latter under the Earl of Shrewsbury. The next owners were the Comptons, who were succeeded by the Cantrells. The heiress of Cantrell married the grandfather of William Bailey Cant, Esq., who, dying in 1800, bequeathed this manor and other estates to Lord Erskine (then at the bar) for his able defence of John Horne Tooke and other persons, who were tried for high treason in 1794. In consequence of some legal informalities the bequest was invalid, and the manor descended to a cousin and coheiress who married John Murcot, Esq. The sixth Earl of Chesterfield was the next owner, and on the death of the seventh Earl, unmarried, it passed to his sister and heiress, wife of the Earl of Carnarvon.

Short Hazles was a small manor lying on the borders of Leicestershire, which belonged for several generations to the Royles. The name of "Hewch Roull" occurs on one of the pre-Reformation bells in the church tower. He was probably churchwarden when the bell was cast.

The village of Hartshorne is situated on the Derby and Leicester road, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles N.W. from Ashby-de-la-Zouch, 11 miles S. from Derby, and $1\frac{1}{2}$ miles from Woodville station, on the Midland railway. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, is an ancient edifice consisting of chancel, nave, and north aisle, with a tower at the west end of it. The nave was rebuilt in 1835, and other alterations were also effected, at a total cost of £1,400. The tower is in the Perpendicular style of the 15th century, and contains a peal of five bells and a clock. Two of the former bear Latin inscriptions, and are believed to date from pre-Reformation times. The two arches of the aisle are ancient, but the windows are a modern insertion. The font is of some antiquity, and some old oak benches of the Elizabethan period remain in the aisle. Under an arch, in the north wall of the chancel, is an altar-tomb, on which are the alabaster effigies of Humphrey Dethick, of Newhall, who died in 1599, and Eliza, his wife. On the front of the monument are represented their six children, one of whom, William, was afterwards rector of this parish. From the inscription it appears that his widow took a second husband, Sir Humphrey Ferrers, of Tamworth, Knight, and died in 1611. An incised slab built into the west wall bears the figures of a knight, in the armour of the 15th century, and his lady. Around the margin is a Latin inscription now partially illegible. The living is a rectory valued in the King's Book at £3 2s. 1d., now worth £540, in the gift of the Earl of Carnarvon, and held by the Rev W. E. Beaumont, M.A., Downing College, Cambridge. The Rectory House is a substantial stone residence, built in 1835 by the Rev. H. W. Buckley, M.A., who died 23rd November, 1892, having held the rectory 59 years. The Rev. Stebbing Shaw, junior, editor of the "Topographer," and historian of Staffordshire, succeeded his father in this rectory in 1799, and died in 1802, at the early age of 41.

The school was founded under the will of the Rev. William Dethick, dated 1624, who bequeathed to his executors the sum of £100, or more if need be, to purchase lands, tenements, and rents of the yearly value of £7. There are about 24 acres of land belonging to the charity, producing £75 yearly. The school was rebuilt in 1813, at a cost of nearly £170. A separate school for girls and infants, with mistress's house was erected in 1864.

There are two Nonconformist chapels in the village, belonging to the Wesleyans and General Baptists respectively. The former was erected about a century ago, and the latter in 1845. The Manor House, a little distance from the church, bears the date 1677; and the Old Manor House is a quaint half-timbered and plaster building, a little S.W. of the church. Several of the rooms have their old oak wainscoting.

Old Midway is a small hamlet midway between Ashby-de-la-Zouch and Burton-on-Trent, and partly in this parish.

Woodville, one mile S.W. from Hartshorne, is a large and flourishing village. A considerable portion of which is on the Leicestershire side of the Leicestershire and Northamptonshire Canal. The Potter's clay is abundant in the district, and an extensive trade is done in the manufacture of sanitary and yellow earthenware. There are also several breweries, which give employment to a large number of people. The village has sprung into existence in recent years, and was at first called Wooden Bottom, from the small wooden structure in which the toll for horses, carts, &c., was collected. The more aristocratic name of Woodville has taken the place of Wooden Bottom, but the latter still adorns the front of the police station in the village.

A church, dedicated to St. Stephen, was erected here in 1846. It is a handsome stone edifice, with apsidal chancel, lighted by five single-light windows, the middle ones being filled with stained glass. By an Order in Council in 1846, Woodville was constituted a consolidated chapelry, the district embracing the parishes of Hartshorne and Ashby-de-la-Zouch. The church stands in the Leicestershire portion, and is consequently in the diocese of Peterborough, and held by the Rev. C. E. Barwise. The Wesleyans erected a handsome new chapel in 1894, and have also a day school, both of which are in Leicestershire.

CHARITIES.—John Hazard, in 1734, gave a rent-charge of £5 4s. to the poor, and the £2 12s. yearly from the Rev. Wm. Dethick's charity, is distributed in bread amongst the poor every Sunday, at the church. Thomas Truelove Kendrick, by will in 1873, left the sum of £1,800 (reduced by the payment of legacy duty to £1,800), the interest thereof to be applied to St. Thomas's Day to and amongst such of the deserving poor people of the parish of Hartshorne, Messrs. Michael Field and Geo. Startin, and the Wesleyan circuit steward, who divide the income (£56) in sums of 10s., 6s., and 4s. amongst poor widows. Charles J. Midway House, who died in 1874, left the sum of £200 to Hartshorne, £200 to Woodville, and £200 to Newhall. The money is invested in the 2½ per cent. consols, and the dividend is added to a clothing club, and given along with Gisborne's charity (£5 10s.) at the end of the year in warm clothing. In addition to the £2 12s. given in bread from Dethick's charity, the sum of £6 10s. is distributed in money at Easter by the churchwardens; and the further £6 17s. 6d., rent of two pieces of land belonging to the poor, is distributed by the churchwardens and overseers.

KEDLESTON.

Kedleston is a small parish and township, containing 941 acres of land belonging solely—with the exception of 10 acres, owned by G. F. Meynell, Esq. and the glebe—to the Rev. Lord Scarsdale. The township is valued for rating purposes at £1,933, and had in 1891 a population of 102. The soil is strong red marl, and is chiefly in grass for dairy purposes. The parish is in the hundred of Appletree, electoral division of Brailsford, petty sessional division and county court district of Derby, union of Belper, and deanery of Duffield.

The manor of Chetelestune (Kedleston) was held at the time of the Domesday Survey by one Gilbert, under Henry de Ferrers. A few years later it was in the possession of Richard de Curzon, whose father, Giraline de Curzon, is said to have accompanied the Conqueror to England, and it has remained in the unbroken succession of this family for nearly eight centuries. They were from an early period of considerable local importance, and have frequently held the distinguished and, in times past, onerous office of high sheriff of the counties of Nottingham and Derby, and they have on numerous occasions represented the shire in Parliament. John Curzon, Esq., was created a baronet in 1641. Sir Nathaniel Curzon, the fifth baronet, was elevated to the peerage in 1761, as Baron Scarsdale of Scarsdale. The Rev. Alfred Nathaniel Holden Curzon, the present baron succeeded his uncle in 1856. His lordship married Blanche, second daughter of Joseph Pocklington-Senhouse, Esq., of Netherhall, Cumberland (who died in 1875), by whom he has had a numerous family.

Kedleston Hall, the seat of this noble family, is a handsome mansion in the Grecian style of architecture, built in 1765, from the designs of Robert Adam, famous architect. It was considered a gem of architectural taste at the time of its erection, and still ranks amongst the finest mansions of the county. It consists of a centre and two wings, having a total length of 360 feet. The grand entrance is approached by a double flight of stone steps, which lead to the portico, the columns of which are said to have been proportioned from those of the Pantheon at Rome. The pediment is surmounted by figures of Venus, Bacchus, and Ceres, and an entablature, richly sculptured in bas-relief. The interior is planned with classic taste, after the ancient Greek style. The entrance hall is a magnificent apartment, 67 feet by 42 feet, and 40 feet high, its beautiful vaulted ceiling being supported on twenty fluted Corinthian columns of alabaster. The walls are adorned by paintings of mythological subjects, and ranged round the room are numerous statues of a similar character. The saloon, which is circular, and crowned by a dome, is 42 feet in diameter and 65 to the top of the dome, and is considered one of the most beautiful rooms of the kind in Europe. The pillars supporting the dome are Scagliola marble, and in four recesses are fireplaces, representing altars, adorned with classic figures in bas-relief. The same classic taste is displayed in the drawing-room and throughout the mansion.

which contains numerous gems of art, both in painting and statuary; old china and bric-à-brac are also abundant.

The Hall is situated about four miles N.W. of Derby, and stands within a beautiful and well-wooded park, containing about 614 acres. There are numerous oaks of magnificent growth, and many trees of other kinds remarkable for their size and beauty. The picturesqueness of the landscape has been enhanced by the widening of a streamlet that flows through the park into a series of lakes and cascades, covering about 25 acres. This is crossed by a fine stone bridge of three arches enriched with statuary. On the water are swans, Canadian geese, and herons and other wild fowl. Near the bridge is a picturesque fountain, where the water flows unceasingly out of a lion's mouth. The deer park, 520 acres, is fenced by oak palings, and contains between 200 and 300 deer. There is in the park a sulphur spring, the water of which resembles that of one of the springs at Harrogate, and was formerly much frequented by persons suffering from certain cutaneous diseases. The park was then open to the public; and for the accommodation of visitors and invalids, an inn was erected on the Derby and Kedleston road, about half-a-mile from the principal lodge gates. It is a commodious structure of red brick, built in 1765, and was a famous road-side hostelry when the Meynell hounds used to meet here. It was discontinued as a public-house about twenty years ago, and is now occupied by Mr. R. H. Archer, farmer.

The church, dedicated to All Saints, stands within the park, near the hall, and is an ancient cruciform edifice, with low central tower containing one bell. The general style of the architecture is that of the Decorated period of the beginning of the 14th century. The only remnant of the previous Norman edifice is the south doorway, with its zig-zag moulding. The stone that fills the semicircular head bears the indistinct incised outlines of a man on horseback blowing a horn. A considerable portion of the stone is quite plain. The church was restored about the beginning of the present century, and again recently. In addition to the high altar in the chancel there was, in Catholic times, an altar in the south transept, the piscina niche of which still remains. There, and in other parts of the church, are numerous memorials of the Curzons, extending from the 13th century to the present time. One slab bears the following notice:—"This slab, uncovered in the nave of this church, October, 1884, is probably in memory of Thomas de Curzon, fourth Lord of Kedleston, who died, circa, 1245." Another memorial consists of two heads, sculptured within quatrefoils. This was discovered beneath the floor in 1810, and is supposed to be the monument of Richard de Curzon and his wife, who died about 1275. The knight is represented in chain armour, and the lady in coif and wimple. Another tomb bears the recumbent effigy of a knight in plate armour, well sculptured in alabaster. There is no inscription, but a very competent authority assigns it to Sir John Curzon, who represented the county in the second and sixth parliaments of Richard II., and died in 1406. On another altar tomb, much more elaborately sculptured, are the effigies of a knight and lady. On the end are carved two groups of children, seven boys and ten girls. It is the monument of another Sir John Curzon, known in his time as Whitehead, who represented the county in several parliaments, and died about 1450. There are brasses of Richard Curzon and Alice Willoughby, his wife, and their eight daughters. The brass, containing their four sons, has been abstracted; as also that bearing the inscription. Sir Richard died in 1496. There are many others, which space does not permit us to enumerate. The east window is filled with stained glass in memory of George Nathaniel Curzon, who was killed by a fall from his horse in Hyde Park, in 1855. The east end of the chancel is externally decorated with urns, skulls, and cross-bones, 18th century work; and above the window are the words "Wee shall," with a sundial beneath, thus forming an admonitory rebus, "We shall dial (die all)." The oldest register book commences in 1600; but there are a few earlier entries relating to the Curzons and another family on the inside cover, extending back to 1597. The living is a rectory, valued in the King's Book at £3 19s. 5d., now worth £130, in the gift of, and held by, the Rev M.A.; curate, G. E. Rogers, who resides at the rectory.

The school, erected by the Hon. Sophia Curzon in 1867, is Lord Scarsdale, and is attended by nine children.

Moordersley, one mile S.W., is a large farm, occupied by M Prestwood, half-a-mile W. of The Hall, is another large farm, in Mr. J. Sims.

KIRK LANGLEY.

Kirk Langley is a parish and village containing 2,524 acres chiefly to Godfrey Franceys Meynell, Esq., J.P., who is lord of Chandos-Pole, Esq.; T. G. Copestake, Esq., J.P., Kirk Langley Esq., J.P., Kirk Langley; Rev. Philip Gell, Buxted, Sussex; Winterden; William Cox, Esq., J.P., Brailsford; Mr. Charles Burrows; and Mrs. Mary Smith, Kirk Langley. The soil is sandy bottom, and is mostly in grass. The ratable value is £1,000. The population in 1891 was 613. The parish is in the hundred of Litchurch, electoral division of Brailsford, poor law union of Litchurch, sessional division and county court district of Derby, and Duffield.

The manor of Langley was divided at a very early period into one on which the church stood was named Kirk Langley, known, from its early owners, as Meynell Langley. The former family of Fitz-Nicholas to the Pipards, who subsequently changed to Twyford. In the reign of Henry VIII., Ursula, daughter and co-heiress of Twyford, married Henry Pole; and German Pole, his descendant, of Kirk Langley to the Bassets of Blore, to whom the manor had previously passed by marriage. The heiress of this family, Anne Cavendish, first Duke of Newcastle, who sold both the manor and the village of Kirk Langley to the present owner, John Meynell, from whom they have descended to the present owner.

The village of Kirk Langley stands on the Derby and London railway, 1½ miles from the former and 8½ from the latter, and three miles from the station, on the Great Northern railway. The church, which is dedicated to St. Michael, is an ancient edifice of stone, comprising chancel, nave, and tower at the west end containing three bells. It is chiefly of the 14th century style, and appears to have been rebuilt on the site of an older church. The fabric was very considerably damaged by fire on the 20th June, 1545, when a portion of it was blown down, and the roof stripped off the roof. The vestry was built, according to an inscription, by John Meynell in 1824. Certain structural alterations and repairs were carried out at a cost of £573. The south aisle was re-roofed, a gallery was added, and the church re-pewed. A thorough restoration has been carried out in the last eight years, at a cost of £3,000.

The chancel is separated from the nave by a pointed arch and an oak screen. The east window, of four lights, is filled with Burlisson & Grylls, illustrating the Te Deum. Above the communion table has been erected a beautiful reredos of alabaster, on which are the figures of three archangels. The three sedilia and piscina remain in the south wall; the former have trefoiled heads and clustered shafts. The floor is laid with black and white tiles, and the ceiling is open to the timbers. On the wall is a beautiful marble tablet to Lieutenant William Meynell, who was killed at Guergivo, on the Danube, in 1854, whilst leading a party of Turks against the Russians. The nave has a flat ceiling of panelled oak, and is divided from the aisles on each side by an arcade of three pointed arches, above which are three clerestory windows. The east end of each aisle was formerly a chapel, and the piscina still remain. The Meynell "quire" or chapel is at the end of the north aisle, from which it is separated by a carved oak screen. The ceiling of this chapel and of the rest of the aisle is panelled oak, with carved bosses, representing the instruments of the Passion. The east window is of three lights, depicting the Crucifixion, and in another window are some fragments of ancient glass. The font, which stands in the aisle, is octagonal, and rests on eight polished granite pillars. The chapel at the east end of the south aisle, known as the Twyford "quire," is also separated from the nave by a carved oak screen. The east end window, of three lights, has been filled with stained glass, depicting the stoning of St. Stephen and the laying on of hands in the centre light, and in each side light are two shields of arms. In the wall is a hagioscope or squint, and there is a similar one in the Meynell chapel. There is the altar tomb of Henry Pole, Esq., who married the heiress of Twyford, and died 1558. There are many tablets in the church to the Meynells, and some also to the families of Brough, Alcock, Cant, Wilmot, and Cheney. The old pews, which stood with their backs to the chancel, have been superseded by chairs. The living is a rectory, net value £290, in the gift of G. F. Meynell, Esq., and held by the Rev. F. W. Meynell, M.A. The tithes were commuted for a rent-charge of £213, and there are, in addition, 90 acres of glebe. The registers commence in 1655.

A new school was erected by subscription in 1879, with master's house attached, at a cost of £1,000, and is endowed with land producing £14 per annum. Accommodation is provided for 128 children, and there is an average attendance of 92.

There are many good houses in the village and other parts of the parish. The residence of T. G. Copestake, Esq., J.P., was erected by his ancestor, Samuel Copestake, in 1771. Another house was, for upwards of 30 years, the residence of the late Rev. John Barton, who conducted a boarding school here, in which the late Charles Stewart Parnell received his early education. It is now occupied by Mrs. Barton and her son-in-law, Mr. G. B. Barrington.

Langley Common is a hamlet consisting of a number of cottages. There is a Church Mission Room here; the Primitive Methodists have a chapel, and another in the village of Kirk Langley.

MEYNELL LANGLEY is a hamlet and manor in this parish, containing 1,147 acres of land, chiefly the property of G. F. Meynell, Esq., whose residence, named after the manor, is a handsome stone mansion, situated in a well-wooded park of about 130 acres. The old hall, the former seat of the family, was pulled down in 1757, and the site is now occupied by the house of G. W. Peach, Esq., J.P.

The Meynells are supposed to derive their descent from a Norman adventurer of the name, who accompanied the Conqueror to England. They were seated here in the early years of the 12th century, but their possession of the estate has had many vicissitudes. Five times it has been lost either by marriage or war, and regained after lengthened periods of alienation. Hugh de Menil, of Langley Menil, represented the county in five parliaments in the reign of Edward III., and his son, Sir Hugo de Menil, a gallant warrior, won distinction at the battles of Cressy and Poitiers, and was invested with the Order of the Bath.

Post Office, Kirk Langley; Mr. George Taylor, sub-postmaster. Letters from Derby arrive mail car at 4-40 a.m., and despatched at 8-4 p.m.

LITTLE EATON.

Little Eaton, formerly a chapelry under St. Alkmund's, Derby, was constituted a separate parish in 1862. Its boundary is conterminous with that of township; area, 520 acres; ratable value, £5,462; and the population in 1891, 893. The principal landowners are the Ecclesiastical Commissioners, who also lords of the manor; G. H. Strutt, Esq., the Trustees of Selina Tempest, B. Scott Currey, Esq. (Eaton Hill.) The parish is in the hundred of Morle and Litchurch, petty sessional division and county court district of Derby, and rural district of Shardlow, and deanery of Duffield.

A branch of the Derby Canal extends to Little Eaton, and the village is in railway communication with the Midland system by a single line extending to Ripley. Stone was formerly extensively quarried in the township; two quarries only are now worked. A considerable number of the inhabitants are employed in two paper mills.

The village stands $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles N.E. from Derby. There was an old chapel dedicated to St. Paul, but when or by whom erected is not known. It was mentioned by the Parliamentary Commissioners in 1650; but appears to have been soon afterwards abandoned and permitted to fall to decay. It was for a time used as a blacksmith's shop; but, in 1791, it was taken down, and a chapel erected on the site by voluntary subscription. This chapel was enlarged in 1837, and in 1851 it was rebuilt in its present form. The style is an imitation of the Norman. The plan comprises chancel, nave, north aisle, and bell turret retaining one bell. In 1882 about £400 was expended on the renovation of the interior. There are two memorial windows and a tablet to the Tempest family. The living is a vicarage, worth £280 a year, with residence, in the gift of the vicar of St. Alkmund's, Derby, and held by the Rev. C. J. Fox since 1879.

The Congregationalists and the United Methodists have chapels in the village. A School Board was formed about 13 years ago, and a new school was erected in 1884, at a cost of £1,800. There is an average attendance of 144. There are several elegant residences in the parish, the names of which will be found in the directory which follows.

CHARITIES.—Mr. John Tempest, by will dated 1861, left the sum of £200 to the minister and churchwardens, upon trust, to invest in the public funds, the dividends thereof to be given in equal portions to 24 poor old men and women, inhabitants of Little Eaton, to provide a comfortable dinner on Christmas Day. There is also a dole of 20s. yearly chargeable on Lord Sandale's property, which is distributed about Christmas time.

Money Order, Telegraph Office, and Savings Bank, at Little Eaton Station; Mr. Edward Sharpe, postmaster. Letters from Derby arrive at 5-0 a.m. and 1-25 and 7-25 p.m., and are despatched at 10-15 a.m. and 8-0 p.m.

LITTLEOVER.

This parish, formerly a chapelry under Mickleover, contains 1,414 acres of land lying on the south-western side of Derby borough boundary, in the hundred of Morleston and Litchurch; petty sessional division, county court district, a deanery of Derby, and union and rural district of Shardlow. It is valued for rating purposes at £5,321, and had, in 1891, a population of 819, an increase of 43 since 1881. The surface is elevated, the air bracing, and the scenery diversified by a rich growth of trees. The principal landowners are the representatives of the late Cockshutt Heathcote, Esq.; R. W. Chandos-Pole, Esq., who is lord of the manor; Mr. Joseph Middleton, of Morley; John Harrison, Esq., J.P., D. Snelston Hall; Mrs. Eastwood, Littleover Grange; Edward McInnes, Esq., the representatives of the late George V. Darby, and the vicar of Littleover right of his glebe.

At the time of the Domesday Survey, Littleover was a berewick or hamlet of Mickleover, and was held with that manor by the abbot of Burton. At Reformation, Henry VIII. granted Mickleover and its appurtenances to William Paget, his secretary, and from this family the property was purchased by Sir Thomas Gresham. Sir Thomas left it to his widow, who had a second husband, by whom she had a son, Sir William Reade, who succeeded to the property. Sir William had an only daughter and heiress, who married Michael Stanhope. The surviving issue of this marriage was three daughters between whom the estates were divided. Littleover was purchased by Edward Wilmot, Esq., and his descendant, Sir Robert Wilmot, Bart., of Chaddesden. In 1801 sold the estate to E. S. Chandos-Pole, Esq.

The ancient family of Findern possessed lands in Littleover. These lands passed by the marriage of Joan, sister and heiress of Thomas Findern, to Cuthbert Justice Harpur, who erected the Old Hall. There were two sons of this marriage—the elder one inherited Swarkeston, and the younger, Sir Richard, settled at Littleover. There is a handsome monument in the church to the memory of Sir Richard and his wife, Mary, daughter of Thomas Beresby, Esq., of Thirburgh, Yorkshire. They are represented kneeling at a desk, the husband clad in a long gown and the wife in a black dress with ruff and hood. In 1611 the Old Hall belonged to Cockshutt Heathcote, Esq., and was for some time occupied as a farmhouse. It stands within its own grounds embosomed in trees and is now the property and residence of Edward McInnes, Esq.

The village, pleasantly situated on the Burton road, $1\frac{1}{2}$ miles S.W. of Derby, consists chiefly of modern well-built houses, with just a sprinkling of old-fashioned thatched cottages to keep alive the memory of its claim to antiquity. The church dedicated to St. Peter, dates from the days of William the Conqueror, and some of the original Norman work remains in the semicircular-headed doorway (now walled up) at the west end. It is a small, plain edifice consisting of chancel with north vestry, nave with north aisle and south porch, and a bell turret on the west gable. The fabric was repaired in 1857, when the north aisle was added; and another restoration took place in 1872, when the organ chamber and vestry were built, choir stalls introduced, and the reredos erected. The architecture is chiefly that of the Decorated period. The prior's doorway remains in the south wall of the chancel, and in the interior is a piscina niche. A new east window, representing the "Institution of the Last Supper," was placed in the chancel in 1892, at a cost of £100, raised by subscription. There are two small two-light stained windows in the north and south walls of the chancel, and two three-light ones in the south wall of the nave. The latter two are memorials of John Tempest Morley, who died in 1873, erected by his widow and the parishioners respectively. Against the north chancel wall is the monument of Sir Richard Harpur, who died in 1635. The font, massive and circular, is a relic of the original Norman chapel. The registers date from 1680. The living is a vicarage worth £135 net, with residence, in the gift of the Rev. Lord Scarsdale, and held by the Rev. H. Milnes Walker, M.A.

The Baptists and Primitive Methodists have chapels in the village. The former is a neat brick structure, built in 1888, at a cost of £550, to supersede an older one. The interior is comfortably furnished to seat 250. The latter is a plain brick building, erected about 22 years ago, at a cost of over £400, to accommodate about 180.

The National School was erected in 1845, and has been considerably enlarged at different times to meet the growing needs of the parish. There are two departments—mixed and infants—attended by about 160 children.

The streets and roads are lighted with gas, which is paid for by voluntary subscriptions; and water is supplied by the Derby Corporation, who have a storage reservoir here covering about one acre.

The proximity of Littleover to Derby, and its elevated situation, render it an eligible residential place, and several excellent houses have been erected. Littleover Grange, the property and residence of Mrs. Eastwood, is a commodious mansion, situated in its own extensive grounds. Littleover House, late the residence of Sir James Allport, now owned and occupied by Lieut.-Col. Geo. Henry Turner, J.P., the general manager of the Midland railway; Fairfield House, the property and residence of Col. Gascoyne, J.P.; and The Knoll, occupied by Lady Woodiwiss, are all situated on the crest of a ridge, and command, from their elevated positions, extensive and beautiful views of the surrounding country.

CHARITIES.—There are two fields, containing together 3a. 1r. 20p., supposed to have been left by Joyce Harpur, now let for £16, which is distributed in sums of 5s. to 20s., at the discretion of the vicar and churchwardens. The poor also receive the rents of two cottages, amounting yearly to £3 4s.

LULLINGTON.

This parish, situated at the southern extremity of the county, consists of a township of its own name; and formerly also included the chapelry of Cote the-Elms. Its total area is 1,807 acres, ratable value £2,656, and population 1,100. It is in the hundred of Repton and Gresley, petty sessional division of Swale cote, union and county court district of Burton-on-Trent, and rural district of deanery of Repton. Mrs. Colville, of Lullington Hall, is lady of the manor, sole owner of the land. The soil is chiefly of a light nature, and rests on a gravelly subsoil; cereals form the main crops.

The village is pleasantly situated seven miles S. of Burton-on-Trent and three miles from Gresley, the nearest railway station. It is compactly built, and has the advantage of a supply of gas from the works at Lullington Hall. The village is of Saxon foundation, and is called, in Domesday Book, Lullitune. It had then its priest, but as the Commissioners do not mention a church, it is probable that it had been destroyed by the Conqueror's army. Shortly after the Conquest the manor came into the possession of the Gresleys, by whom a church was erected, and subsequently appropriated to Gresley Priory, which had been founded by that family. After the dissolution of religious houses the impropriate tithes were leased from the Crown by various persons, and in 1700 they were purchased by the Earl of Dorset. They remained with this family until 1781, when they passed to Dame Wilmot Gresley. In 1840 the rectorial advowson of the vicarage were purchased from the executors of Sir John Gresley by the late C. R. Colville, Esq., and his widow is the present lay rector and patron.

The church, which bears the Saxon dedication of All Saints, is a handsome building of stone in the Decorated style, consisting of chancel, nave, south and western tower, surmounted by an octagonal spire. The tower and spire belong to the original church. The rest of the fabric was rebuilt in 1778, but on the original lines—the two aisles being dispensed with and a shallow transept taking the place of the chancel. The spire was restored in 1861 at a cost of £500, and the following year a south aisle and chancel were added at a cost of £2,000. The east window is a beautiful piece of work, by Capronni of Brussels, representing nine scenes from the Old and New Testaments. It is a memorial of Sir Charles Henry Colville, Knt., late of Newton Colville, Cambridgeshire, and Dame Harriet Anne, his wife. There are six bells in the tower, cast in 1786. The registers begin with the year 1560, and contain some curious entries. One records the granting of a licence by the vicar in 1638 allowing parishioners to eat flesh meat in Lent. The living is a vicarage, yearly value £112, with residence, held by the Rev. Eustace King, B.A., Christ Church, Oxford. There were formerly 60 acres of glebe, but this has been sold recently and the money invested.

The church school was erected by the late Charles Robert Colville, Esq., in 1843. It is attended by 56 children. There is also a social club and reading room in the village.

Lullington Hall, the residence of Mrs. Colville, is pleasantly situated in a park adjoining the village. It was previously an ancient farm house, to which additions were made by the late C. R. Colville, Esq. Traces of a moat are still visible. The family of Colville is of ancient and honourable lineage. Its founder accompanied the Conqueror to England, and his name is recorded on the roll of Battle Abbey. The present branch was long seated at Newton Colville, in Cambridgeshire, which property was sold by the grandfather of the late C. R. Colville, in 1792.

Various small benefactions have been left to the poor of the parish, which now produce about £3 yearly.

MACKWORTH.

This parish comprises the townships of Mackworth and Markeaton, in the hundred of Morleston and Litchurch, electoral division of Brailsford, petty sessional division and county court district of Derby, poor-law union of Belper, and rural deanery of Duffield.

Mackworth township embraces an area of 1,383½ acres of land, ratable value £2,645, and population 237. The soil is strong loam with part clay, and is chiefly laid down in grass for dairy purposes. F. N. Mundy, Esq., Markeaton Hall, is lord of the manor and principal owner; Lord Scarsdale owns the Castle farm, and Godfrey F. Meynell, Esq., has also a small portion of land in the township.

Mackworth (Machevorde in Domesday Book) was at the time of the Norman Survey only a berewick or hamlet in the manor of Markeaton; soon afterwards it was reputed a distinct manor, but has always been held conjointly with Markeaton. A family styled de Mackworth is said to have held the manor under the Audleys, in the reign of Henry VI.; and in the third year of that reign Thomas Mackeworth represented the county in Parliament. The ancestor of the family was one of the four esquires who attended Lord Audley as a body guard at the famous battle of Poitiers, and was rewarded with an estate here, on which he built a castle, styling himself de Mackworth. They are said to have resided here till the reign of Charles I., but they have left no impress on the history of the stirring times in which they lived. There is a tradition that the castle was blown down by Cromwell's cannon, and the eminence on which the artillery stood still bears the name of "Cannon Hill." The tower of the entrance gateway, now in ruins, is the only portion of the building left to preserve the memory of the castle, which, judging from this fragment, must have been of considerable extent. It is now the property of Lord Scarsdale.

The village, which is situated 2¼ miles N.W. from Derby, contains a few good modern residences. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a handsome edifice of stone, consisting of chancel, nave, north and south aisles, south porch, and a western tower surmounted by an octagonal spire, containing three 14th century bells. There was a church on the manor at the time of the Domesday Survey, but the present edifice is of later date, having apparently been rebuilt in the 14th century, when the Decorated style of architecture prevailed. The fabric underwent a general restoration in 1851, when a vestry and organ chamber were built on the north side of the chancel. The total cost of this restoration was £1,167. The chancel is a very fine specimen of the Decorated style, with pinnacled buttresses at the corners. The east window is of five lights, with trefoils and a quatrefoil in the upper tracery. It was filled with stained glass in 1851, representing the four evangelists, in memory of Francis N. C. Mundy, who died in 1840. The triple sedilia and piscina remain in the south wall. The communion table, with its beautiful cross, massive candlestick vases, and vesper lights, is approached by two marble steps, and the floor of the sacristy beyond is laid with Minton tiles. Above the altar is a beautiful reredos presented by the widow of the late William Mundy, Esq., in memory of her husband. It is elaborately wrought in alabaster, malachite, lapis lazuli, and Irish and French marbles. The canopies are exquisitely carved, and on either side is Florentine inlaid work, copied from a church at Pavia in Italy, and executed by G. Lomas, of Derby. The altar rails are of the purest white Derbyshire alabaster with bosses of Blue John and other marbles at the intersections of the open diaper work. These rails are a reproduction of the balcony in the palace of the Cæsars at Rome, and similar to those in the church of St. Paul without the walls, Rome. They were erected by Mrs. F. N. Mundy, in 1893. Above the vestry door is a richly-carved canopy of Derbyshire veined marble, supported by demi angels and crowned with three angelic figures in the attitude of praise and adoration, bearing the dedicatory initials D. O. M. (Deo optimo maximo: To God the best and greatest). This canopy was designed by Mr. and Mrs. Mundy, and executed by G. Lomas, of Derby. The light and graceful wrought-iron screen that divides the organ chamber from the chancel is a fac simile of one in Vienna.

The nave is separated from the aisles on either side by three pointed arches resting on octagonal pillars; and above the north arcade are three small square-headed windows of two lights. A piscina was discovered, in 1851, at the east end of the south aisles, showing the presence of an altar here in pre-Reformation times. In the same aisle is a founder's arched recess, in which lies an alabaster slab bearing within a sunk quatrefoil circle the sculptured head and fingers of a prophet and an incised Calvary cross. The inscription is nearly obliterated. This was found under the floor during the restoration, but it now probably occupies its original position. There is a curious arched recess with a projecting English canopy a little distance above in the north wall of the north aisle. The original purpose of this recess is doubtful. Sir Stephen Glynn says it was formerly known as the Abbot's Seat,* and others think it an Easter sepulchre used in the ceremonies of Holy Week. The recess now contains a tabulated list of the church doles and charities. There was an altar at the east end of the north aisle also. The window was taken out and an arch erected when the organ chamber was added at the restoration. Spanning this arch is an oak screen in the Decorated style, made out of the old oak altar rails by Messrs. Lomas and Derby. On each side of the arch is a richly carved canopied niche of the Perpendicular period, but of unequal height. There are two stained glass windows to the memory of the Sandars family in the south aisle, and another filled with heraldic emblazonry showing the various alliances of the direct line of the Mundys of Markeaton from the time of Edward I., when their pedigree commences. In the same aisle is a table tomb of alabaster bearing a clumsy sculptured effigy of a man in long gown and hanging sleeves. It is the monument of Edwd. Mundy, Esq., who died in 1611, and in the front are small effigies of six sons and two daughters. There are tablets to the French and Forrester families. The pulpit, hexagonal in shape, is of fine Derbyshire alabaster with pillars of Irish marble resting on a Dorsetshire marble base. The upper part is enriched with beautifully carved flowers and fruit.

The porch has a parvise, or chamber, over it, which was probably the abode of the sacristan. Two loophole windows, pierced in different directions through the masonry, enabled him to see both side altars. The registers date from 1611, and under the year 1618 contain a copy of a licence, permitting Mrs. Dorothie Poole, gentlewoman, then resident with Francis Mundy, to eat flesh meat during Lent, in consequence of her great age and sickness.

The living was a rectory till the closing years of the 15th century, when it was appropriated to Darley Abbey, and a vicarage ordained with an income of £9 per annum. It is now worth £170, and is in the gift of F. N. Mundy, Esq., and held by the Rev. G. A. Shaw, M.A. A list of rectors and vicars, so far as they are known, dating from the year 1200 is in the porch. The churchyard was enlarged a few years ago at a cost of £57, of which sum £50 was contributed by Mr. William Goodall, in memory of his son.

There is a good school in the village, erected by the late William Mundy, Esq., M.P., in 1868. It is attended by 48 children, and is chiefly supported by F. N. Mundy, Esq.

MARKEATON township embraces an area of 1,836 acres; ratable value, £3,675; and population, 217. This township was added to Derby for all poor rate purposes about three years ago. The principal landowners are F. N. Mundy, Esq. (lord of the manor), and Lord Scarsdale; Lord Belper owns about 30 acres, and W. Gisborne, Esq., of Allestree Hall, has 18 acres.

The manor of Markeaton (Marchetune in Domesday Book) belonged at the time of the survey to Hugh, Earl of Chester. Subsequently this and the adjoining manor of Mackworth were held under the Earls of Chester by a family named Touchet, one of whom, in 1251, obtained a charter of free warren. The Touchets afterwards became possessed of the barony of Audley, and John, Lord Audley, one of their descendants, about the year 1516, sold the manors of Mackworth and Markeaton to John Mundy, a citizen, and, a little later, Lord Mayor of London. The pedigree of this family commences with John Mundy, who lived in the reign of Edward I., and the various alliances of the direct line from the above John Mundy are emblazoned in the east window of the south aisle of Mackworth Church. Francis Noel Clarke Mundy, Esq., great-grandfather of the present owner of the estate, was the author of two much-admired poems, "Needwood Forest" and "The Fall of Needwood." The hall is a large three-storey mansion of brick, erected about the middle of last century, and stands in a park of about 200 acres. At the rear of the house are two small but pretty waterfalls, sheltered by willow, alder, and holly trees.

The soil of the township is gravelly, with a little clay, and a considerable portion is laid down for grazing. Mr. George Bryer, of Park Farm, carried off the prize at the Derby show in 1881 for the best dairy farm within 20 miles round. At the stud farm of Mr. Whitehurst are some horses of well-known worth; Lincolnshire Boy was the sire of six champion winners in 1893, and amongst them was Rokeby Fuchsia, which won the challenge cup over all ages at a recent London show.

CHARITIES.—Richard Croshaw, Esq., of London, by will in 1631, left a legacy to the Corporation of Derby, in consideration whereof to pay £28 yearly for ever in a weekly distribution of bread and money amongst eight poor and aged inhabitants. There are other charities, amounting to about £36 a year, which are given in coal and money on St. Thomas's Day.

MEASHAM.

This parish is situated in a detached portion of Derbyshire, lying within county of Leicester; in the hundred of Repton and Gresley; petty sessional division of Swadlincote; county court district and union of Ashby; and dean of Repton. Its total extent is 1,749 acres, ratable value £6,680, and the population in 1891 was 1,653. The Earl of Loudoun and Lord Donington are principal landowners, and the latter is lord of the manor.

At the time of the Domesday Survey, the manor of Messeham (Measham) belonged to the King. Subsequently it was held by the Blounts; and Walter Blount, created Lord Mountjoy, Lord High Treasurer of England in 1464, died ten years later, seised of this and 19 other manors in Derbyshire. It passed through several generations of this family, and subsequently came into possession of the Wollastons, by whom it was sold to Joseph Wilkes. The manor was afterwards purchased by the Marquis of Hastings, from whom it descended to Lord Donington.

Coal has been worked here for upwards of 300 years. Wyrley, who visited this place in 1596, says:—"Mesham, or the hamlet upon the Meesse, is placed at the southernmost part of Darbieshier, a village belonging to Lord Sheffield which are many cole mines, little else worthy of remembrance." A colliery, laid in, was re-opened about twelve months ago by Mr. William Tate. The shaft is sunk to a depth of 26 yards, where a seam of coal 12 feet thick is reached, still deeper lie three other workable seams. The present daily output is about 25 tons. Two still more important industries are the manufacture of gloves, tapes, and haberdashery, carried on at the Measham Mills, and the manufacture of bricks and terra cotta.

The village, which takes its name from the river Mease, is situated on Ashby-de-la-Zouch and Tamworth road, three miles from the former place, four miles from Derby, and close to Measham station, on the Ashby and Nuneaton branch of the Midland, and London and North-Western joint railway. The church, dedicated to St. Lawrence, is an ancient structure, consisting of nave, side aisles, south porch, and western tower, containing four bells. There is record of its erection, but it is mentioned as early as 1271, as a chapel of St. Wystan, Repton. It was wholly rebuilt when the Decorated style prevailed. In 1733, in consequence of its dilapidated condition, the tower, which had a lofty and beautiful spire, fell down, and was rebuilt as it now stands at a cost of £1,059. The church underwent restoration in 1842, when the interior was re-seated with substantial oak pews, and a gallery erected across the west end at a cost of £1,600. The aisles are separated from the nave by five lofty Gothic arches, above which, on each side, are six clerestory windows. These were inserted when the walls were raised to receive the present flat roof in the 15th century. A stained glass window, in the south aisle, commemorates William Wootton Abney, Esq., of Measham Hall, who died in 1866; all the other windows have stained glass in their traceried heads. At the upper end of the centre aisle is a very massive and handsome eagle lectern of brass, inscribed "To the Glory of God and in memory of the Rev. John Hewetson, M.A., for 41 years vicar of Measham. This lectern was subscribed for by his parishioners and friends, Easter, 1894." This chapel was included in the grant of the mother church of St. Wystan to Repton priory, and it remained in the possession of the canons till the dissolution of religious houses. The rectorial tithes then reverted to the Crown, and were granted by Queen Elizabeth to the Earl of Huntingdon. They subsequently passed, together with the advowson, to the Wollastons, and have descended, with the manor, to Lord Donington. The living is now a vicarage, worth £87 per annum, with residence, held by the Rev. J. Hewetson, M.A., who succeeded his father, the late Rev. J. Hewetson, M.A., in 1893. The church will accommodate 606, and 300 seats are free and unappropriated.

The Baptist Chapel is a neat, red brick structure, rebuilt in 1841, at a cost of £700; the Wesleyans, Primitive Methodists, and Wesleyan Reformers have chapels in the village.

The Catholic Chapel, dedicated to St. Charles, was erected by the Countess of Loudoun in 1881. It is a neat edifice of brick with stone facings, and is used also as a day school, which is attended by about 70 children.

The National School was erected in 1827, and has since been considerably altered and enlarged, the total outlay having been £3,000. There are two departments (mixed and infants), having a united accommodation for 960 and an average attendance of 268.

Measham appears to have attained to some importance in mediæval times, and in 1310 a market on Tuesday, and a three days' fair at the festival of the translation of St. Thomas the Martyr, was granted to William de Beresford, who then possessed the manor. A Market House was built some years ago by Mr. Joseph Wilkes, but it was afterwards converted into dwelling-houses and the market discontinued.

Measham Hall, the seat and property of Captain Abney, is a plain mansion of brick, situated in a park of about 30 acres, $1\frac{1}{4}$ miles east of the village. The Abneys were originally seated at Abney in the Peak, whence they took their name. They removed thence to Willesley, which remained in their possession upwards of 500 years, until alienated by the late Sir Charles Abney Hastings, Bart.

CHARITIES.—The following charities are recorded on a tablet in the church, dated 1841:—
 "Fifteen acres of land within the liberty of Donisthorpe, purchased with monies left by Susannah and Deborah Hall, of Measham, in the year 1660, and James Abney, of Willesley, Esq., in 1682, and are held, exempt from land tax, by two sets of trustees under their respective appointments. The Rev. Henry Ullock, sometime dean of Rochester, and rector of Leybourne, in Kent, by will bearing date the 19th of November, 1704, left, to the minister and churchwardens of Measham, £6 per annum for ever, charged on his estate at Ringwood, near Dover, and payable to them in London, annually, at Michaelmas. This rent-charge is now subject to a deduction of 16s. a year for land tax. A mortgage for £30 on the Hinckley and Melbourne turnpike road, which now produces 27s. a year, payable, annually, on the 1st day of January. Some shares in Monck's Austrey Charity, at the discretion of the trustees of the estate, left by Thomas Monck, by will dated 1713." The lands left by Susannah and Deborah Hall have been sold and the money invested in consols. The total income of the charities is at present about £50, which is distributed in various ways on St. Thomas's Day.

MELBOURNE.

This is an extensive and ancient parish, lying on the south bank of the Trent and abutting on Leicestershire. It is in the hundred of Repton and Gresley, petty sessional division of Repton, union and rural district of Shardlow, county of Derby.

court district of Derby, and is the head of a deanery and of a division for the election of a member of the county council. It is under the jurisdiction of a parish council of nine members, and is represented on the union and rural district council by three guardians and councillors. The total area of the parish, according to the Ordnance Survey, is 3,307 acres, including 85½ acres of roads, 22 acres of railway, and 92 acres of water surface; ratable value, £14,014; and the population in 1891 was 3,369. Earl Cowper is the principal landowner; Lord Donington is also a considerable proprietor, and lord of the manor, for whom a court is occasionally held at the Roebuck Inn. The other large owners are the Cantrell family; Mrs. Whitaker, Smalley Hall; Sir V. H. Crewe, Bart., Calke Abbey; the Misses Buck; James Salisbury; W. B. G. Tasker, Esq., Melbourne; Richard Beaumont Tasker, Esq., and Miss Tasker; and W. K. Newbold, King's Newton. The Midland Railway Co. own the land occupied by 3,300 lineal yards of their line.

The soil is various—a rich black mould, loam, clay, marl—and is well adapted for market gardens, of which there are nearly eighty in the parish, giving employment to a considerable number of the inhabitants. The manufacture of lace, gloves, mittens, &c., was introduced into Melbourne in the early part of this century by Mr. Haimes, a gentleman of great mechanical and inventive genius. The articles produced rivalled those of France, and found a ready market. Another lace mill was established by Messrs. Hemsley & Son, who manufacture silk Milanese and taffeta. The former firm was converted into a limited liability company in 1891, and have added the hosiery manufacture to their business, employing about thirty machines in the latter branch. Another important industry is the boot and shoe manufacture, which was introduced by Mr. John Hemsley in 1865. At first only children's felt and coloured leather goods, needle sewn, were produced; in 1867 he commenced to make rivetted goods, and under the management of Mr. Tivey a considerable trade was soon developed. After the death of Mr. Hemsley, in 1880, Mr. Tivey commenced business on his own account, and in 1882 built the West End Boot factory, which, by later additions, has been extended to double its original size. About 150 hands are constantly employed, and a large home and export trade is done. The success achieved by Mr. Hemsley induced others to enter into the competition; several new factories have been erected, and the trade is also carried on in a less pretentious way in cottages and shops.

Melbourne was one of the royal manors in the time of our Saxon forefathers, and at the Conquest it was retained as part of the demesne of the Crown. Some time afterwards it was attached to the Earldom and Duchy of Lancaster, and in 1327 Henry, Earl of Lancaster, obtained a charter for a weekly market and an annual fair in his manor of Melbourne. There was a castle here, but its ducal owners do not appear to have favoured it often with their presence. It was for many years the prison of John, Duke of Bourbon, who was captured at the battle of Agincourt in 1415. In a survey of the manor made in 1602, it is described as a "faire ancient castle, which her Majesty keepeth in her own hands." Surrounding it was a park stocked with deer. Edward IV., in the first year of his reign, confiscated the Duchy of Lancaster with all its possessions, and annexed it to the Crown, and the manor and castle of Melbourne remained a royal appendage till 1604, when James I. granted them to the Earl of Nottingham. That nobleman conveyed them to Henry, Earl of Huntingdon, from whom they have descended, through the Marquis of Hastings, to Lord Donington, the present owner.

The castle was maintained in its integrity during its Royal ownership, but the Earls of Huntingdon entirely neglected it, and it gradually fell to ruin; but, if we may believe local tradition, its destruction was effected by Cromwell's soldiers. Nothing now remains of it except a piece of wall about 40 yards in length, and varying from 10ft. to 15ft. in height.

There was a church on the royal manor of Melbourne before the Conquest, as recorded in Domesday Book, and when the bishopric of Carlisle was founded by Henry I., in 1133, this church formed part of the endowment. After the death of the first bishop, the see remained vacant for about sixty years in consequence of the incursions of the Scots, and during this time its revenues were wholly appropriated by the Crown. Walter Malclere, who was elected bishop in 1191, obtained from Henry III. a confirmation of the charter granting the rector of Melbourn, with all its appurtenances, to the see of Carlisle; and six years later he had the grant of a five days' fair, commencing on the Nativity of the Blessed Virgin (September 8th). Subsequently an episcopal palace was erected here, in which the bishops occasionally resided for some centuries, when the border was devastated by the Scots; and it is recorded that Bishop Kirby (1332-1341) held an ordination in the church of Melbourn during the Border Wars. In the reign of Charles I., Sir John Coke, Secretary of State, obtained a lease of the palace and impropriate rectory from the see of Carlisle. "In 1701 an agreement was made between Thomas Coke and Bishop Nicolson that, in consideration of the increase in the rent from £45 to £70, and of the vicar's stipend from £20 to £35, the fee should be vested in perpetuity in Mr. Coke, his heirs and assigns." This agreement was confirmed by Act of Parliament in 1704. Subsequently the mansion and parsonage manor passed to Sir Matthew Lamb, Bart., by marriage with Charlotte, sole heiress to her brother, George Lewis Coke. Peniston Lamb, Bart., their son, was elevated to the peerage of Ireland as 1st Viscount Melbourne, Baron of Kilmore, and a few years later he was created Viscount Melbourne of Melbourne, co. Derby. After three descents the title became extinct, and the estate passed by the marriage of the heiress to Earl Cowper. The palace was taken down about seventy years ago, and during the demolition several coins, earthenware vessels, and other curious relics were found. A modern residence now occupies the site. The Hall is a large mansion of stone, built by Thomas Coke on the site of the old Rectory House. It was here that Bacon wrote his "Saints' Rest." The gardens are extensive, and contain many walks, bordered by yews of considerable age and size. The grounds are laid out in the old Dutch style, and are ornamented with fountains and statues. The house is at present occupied by a caretaker.

The town is not large, but the handsome mills and well-built houses indicate general prosperity. It is situated $8\frac{1}{2}$ miles S.E. from Derby, 6 miles N.W. from Ashby-de-la-Zouch, and about half-a-mile from the station of its own name on the Derby and Ashby branch of the Midland railway. It had formerly its market, but the opening of the railway diverted the trade to Derby, and the market was discontinued about thirty years ago. In the centre of the Market Place is a monument, surmounted by an octagonal spire, bearing a brass plate inscribed—"This monument was erected by subscription of the inhabitants of Melbourne to commemorate the Jubilee of the Beneficent, Glorious, and Imperious Reign of Victoria, Queen of Great Britain and Ireland, 1837-1897." Melbourne: Royal Manor, Church, Priest, and Mill, Domesday, 1086; Rectory, 1132; Annexed to Bishopric of Carlisle, 1132 to 1704; Castle fortified, 1311; Prison, 1415; Demolished, 1630; Royal Deer Park, Edward III., 1329; Market on Wednesday, Fair on Michaelmas Day and two following days granted, 1329; Manor annexed to Duchy of Lancaster, 1377 to 1791; Common enclosed by Act of Parliament, 1791; Railway to Derby opened, 1839; James Wright, Hon. Architect." This monument was erected in 1889.

The streets are lighted with gas by the Melbourne Gas Light & Coke Co. Ltd., whose works were erected in 1853, and considerably enlarged in 1885; water of good quality is supplied by the Long Eaton Urban Council, whose works are situated within this parish. The Athenæum, a large building of brick, was erected by subscription in 1853, at a cost of £1,200. In the upper storey is located the Mechanics' Institute, with its library of 1,400 volumes. The first Sunday after; and a statute hiring on the following Monday. A tenement containing three acres, was laid out and opened in 1860. There are two mortuaries, one for Churchmen the other for Dissenters. Both political parties have a club in the town. The Liberal Club is a commodious structure, containing a public hall capable of seating 400 persons. It was erected in 1889, at a cost of £1,600, raised in shares.

The church, which bears the dedication of St. Michael, is said by tradition to have been founded by King Ethelred on the death of his queen; but the present edifice is not older than the beginning of the twelfth century, and is one of the finest examples of Norman work in England. In plan it is cruciform, consisting of chancel, nave with side aisles, transepts, central tower, and western portico flanked by two small towers. The chancel and transepts formerly terminated in semicircular apses, but these were removed about the close of the fifteenth century, and the present flat ends substituted. The entrance to the church is through a noble round-headed doorway in the western portico. This portico has a groined stone roof, and above it is a chamber or gallery opening into the church. The nave is separated from the aisles by five round arches, enriched with chevron ornament, and resting on circular pillars. Above these arches are arcades or triforia opening on the clerestory, but they differ in style on each side, clearly showing two different dates of erection. That on the north side is undoubtedly coeval with the oldest parts of the church; whilst the south side is of a style that prevailed about the middle of the thirteenth century. Four arches, similar to those of the aisles, opening into the chancel, transepts, and nave, support the central tower. Through the pier on the north side of the chancel is a hagioscope opening into the transept; and there seems to have formerly been a corresponding one on the opposite side, giving views of the high altar from those positions. There was an altar in each transept, and a piscina at the east end of the south aisle shows there was an altar here also. In 1842, some mural paintings were discovered beneath the coats of whitewash on the tower piers, but they were too imperfect for preservation. The font is evidently of considerable antiquity. The circular bowl rests on four short cylindrical shafts which rise from a circular base. There are eight bells in the tower, the oldest of which bears the date 1610.

The church was thoroughly restored and re-seated with oak in 1862, at a cost of £3,000, under the superintendence of Sir Gilbert Scott. During the progress of the work a sepulchral slab, bearing a floriated cross in bold relief, was discovered, and fragments of other slabs may be seen built into the walls. In the south transept, under a founder's arch, is the recumbent effigy of a mail-clad knight, bearing a shield on his left arm; and here also are some ancient alabaster slabs to members of the family of Hardinge, of King's Newton. A change was effected in this transept in 1891. A loft for the organ was constructed, and the space beneath converted into a vestry. The chancel is furnished with pitchpine stalls, and lighted by three stained glass windows. Crossing the entrance is a handsomely carved oak screen, surmounted by a cross; and near this stands the eagle lectern, a very fine piece of brass work, inscribed "To the Glory of God and in loving memory of Richard Thomas and Louisa Susanna Tasker."

There were at least four chantries in or connected with the church. William Bars, of King's Newton, founded one in 1380, in honour of St. Catherine; and Ralph Shirley left to it by will, dated 1381, certain lands and tenements, the testator ordaining that the "chantry priest shall uphold a free school in Melbourne for ever, taking of every scholar one penny by the year, and shall also say or sing mass daily for ever." The chantry of St. Michael was founded about the same time by one of the Melbourn family, and, in 1400, Sir Simon de Melbourn and Thomas Filke, clerk, founded a chantry in honour of the Blessed Virgin within the church of St. Mary, of Melbourne, probably the chapel that had belonged to the episcopal palace. The chantry roll speaks also of the "chauntrie founded by the heyers of Lee Hunt." The registers date from 1653.

The living is a vicarage worth £400 a year, with residence, in the gift of the Bishop of Southwell, and held by the Rev. Canon Singleton, M.A., rural dean of Melbourne, and surrogate. Earl Cowper is lay rector, and responsible for the maintenance of the chancel. Adjoining the vicarage is a parish room, erected the early part of the present year.

Nonconformity is an important factor in the religious life of Melbourne. The General Baptist Chapel, erected in 1750, and enlarged in 1832, at an expense of £1,000, will accommodate about 700 persons. Sunday schools were added in 1810, enlarged in 1835, and rebuilt in 1852. The Congregationalists, originally the Independents, have a handsome chapel in High Street. Wesleyanism introduced through the instrumentality of the Countess of Huntingdon, an intensely religious lady of strong Calvinistic proclivities. Their first chapel built in 1826, at a cost of £600. This edifice could accommodate 300 persons, sufficed for their needs till 1870, when a much more ornate structure was erected at an expense of £2,000, to seat 400 persons. The old chapel is used as a Sunday school. The New Jerusalem Chapel was built in 1863. The Swaborgians had a chapel here formerly. A mission hall and 14 memorial cottages enclosing three sides of a quadrangle, were erected by the late Mr. Thomas, of excursion fame, and a native of Melbourne, for the benefit of members of the General Baptist denomination. The cottages are to be occupied by poor and deserving persons of that persuasion, belonging to Melbourne or within a radius of 25 miles, at a nominal rent not exceeding one penny per week for each person, and no cottage to be occupied by more than four persons at one time. The cost of the land and buildings was £5,390, and a further sum was set apart to keep the premises in repair.

Previous to the Reformation a free school was taught by the priest in Catherine's Chantry. After the suppression of chantries and the confiscation of their endowments by Edward VI., there was no provision for educational purposes in the parish till 1738, when Lady Elizabeth Hastings, amongst other charities, gave, by indenture, £10 yearly, for the support of a free school in Melbourne. In 1821 the National School was erected, and the endowment of £19 10s.—transferred to it for the free education of twelve boys. Another school was built in 1884, and enlarged in 1894. A School Board for Melbourne and district has been formed, and a school, attended by 126 boys, is temporarily held in the Baptist Sunday School. The girls and infants are taught in the Athenæum, but permanent schools will be erected as soon as a suitable site is obtained.

King's Newton is a village and hamlet containing 795 acres, included in the parish of Melbourne. It forms a separate manor, which was given, with the manor of Melbourne, in 1322, to Robert de Holland. The Hardinge family possessed it, and was seated here for several centuries. Robert Hardinge raised a tournament horse in support of Charles I., and received the honour of knighthood from Charles II., whom he entertained at his house here. To this day it is said erroneously, that the place owes its royal title of King's Newton, its name previously being simply Newton*. The Hall, in which the King was entertained, and where he is said to have left his signature on a tablet of glass, was burnt down in 1859, and only the ruined walls overgrown with ivy now remain. The hall and estate continued in the possession of the Hardinges until purchased by Sir Penistone Lamb. There are several members of the family in Melbourne Church. Another family, long identified with King's Newton, was the Radcliffes. They resided in the Manor House, which stood in a field near the Trent, called "Hall Close." Not a trace of the manor is now left. There appears to have been formerly a chapel in King's Newton, in which John Ragge left, by will in 1517, two shillings for its reparation. In the centre of the village are the steps of the ancient cross, the shaft of which was thrown down long ago. Some years since the head was found in a well. On four sides were sculptured the Virgin and Child, the Crucifixion, and two figures of doubtful identity. Not far from the ruins of the hall is a well of ex-water, overarched with stone, called "Holy Well." Over the archway is a Latin inscription, intimating that this Holy Well was constructed by Robert, of the name of Hardinge, in 1666. During the construction of the railway in 1866, several urns, containing burnt ash and bones, were dug up; there were also indications of a small Roman camp.

The Long Eaton Water Works, erected in 1892, are situated in King's Newton. The water, drawn from the Millstone grit, is of excellent quality. The well is 75 feet deep. There are four surface hydraulic pumps and four lift pumps, raising 520 gallons of water per minute, which is forced through $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles of piping to a height of 180 feet. The main reservoir is at Castle Donington, where 279,600 gallons can be stored.

MICKLEOVER.

This is a truly rural parish, consisting of the township of its own name, and formerly included the chapelries of Findern and Littleover, but these have been privileged with parochial independence. Its superficial extent, according to the union returns, is 2,334 acres; ratable value, £10,134; and the number of inhabitants in 1891 was 1,555, of whom 521 were in the Lunatic Asylum. The parish is in the Morleston and Litchurch hundred, petty sessional division and county court district of Derby, deanery of Longford, poor law union of Burton-on-Trent, and rural district of Repton. The surface is undulated and diversified with woodland; the soil various, and chiefly in pasture. Charles E. Newton, Esq., is lord of the manor and principal landowner; the other proprietors are Edward Job Wade, Esq., Mickleover; Derby County Asylum; Rev. R. C. Bindley, in right of the glebe; Thomas Finney, senr.; J. C. Fowler; Exors. of C. Heathcote, Esq.; R. W. Chandos Pole, Esq.; Mary Wallis; George Wade; Exors. of Sir A. Woodiwiss; C. A. Wallroth, Esq.; and G. Tempest Wade.

The manor, at the time of the Domesday Survey, belonged to Burton Abbey, and it remained in the possession of that monastery till the Reformation, when all religious houses were dissolved by Act of Parliament, and their possessions transferred to the Crown. Henry VIII. granted this manor to Sir William Paget, his secretary; since then it has been in the possession of many knightly families, and was finally purchased by Mr. Newton, who died in 1789, and from whom it has descended to the present owner.

The village is pleasantly situated on the main road between Derby and Uttoxeter, three miles S.W. from the former town, and one mile from Mickleover station, on the Great Northern railway. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is an ancient edifice of stone, and consists of chancel, with north vestry, nave, north and south aisles, porch, and a west tower containing a clock and three bells. It is in the Decorated Gothic style which prevailed at the beginning of the 14th century. There is a tradition that it occupies the site of an earlier church, which was destroyed by fire. The fabric underwent an extensive restoration in 1858, at a cost of about £2,000. At the same time the north aisle was lengthened, and the vestry built. The east window of three lights is a memorial of Augusta Marian Curzon, wife of the Rev. F. E. Curzon, who died in 1827, at the early age of 21. A three-light window in the south wall is filled with stained glass in memory of Anne Rosamond, wife of C. E. Newton, Esq., who died in 1864. There are also memorial tablets on the walls to Robert Newton Leaper Newton, Sir Abraham Woodiwiss, and others. The nave is separated from the aisles on each side by four pointed arches, the easternmost ones being smaller than the others. The church will accommodate 350; and of these sittings 160 are free. The registers date from 1607. The living is a vicarage worth £290, in the gift of Lord Scarsdale, and held by the Rev. R. C. Bindley, M.A.

The Wesleyans and Primitive Methodist have chapels in the village; the former was erected in 1820, and the latter in 1852.

The earliest provision for educational purposes was made by Robert Newton, Esq., who, in 1784, gave £200 in trust, the interest thereof to be applied to the use of a school at Mickleover. From Dr. Pegge's MSS., written about ten years prior to this bequest, it appears that the school was taught in the chancel of the church. A National School for boys and girls was erected by Mrs. Newton in 1852, to accommodate about 100 children, nine of whom were taught free in consideration of the interest of Mr. Newton's bequest. In 1874 a School Board was formed, by whom commodious schools were erected in 1881, at a cost of £2,200. Under the New Educational Act all the children are free, and the endowment goes to the school funds. Valuable book prizes are given yearly to the best attenders, and under this salutary inducement there is little work for the attendance officer. The old national school has been converted into a coffee and reading room, which is open during the winter months.

The village, though very considerably modernised, still retains a timbered houses and a thatched cottage or two to remind us of the old Manor House, the ancient seat of the Newtons, was demolished, and sent mansion built on an adjacent site in 1862. Cedars Lodge, an ancient timbered house of the Elizabethan style, still retains much of its appearance. Over the porch is the date 1648, and on the oak panelling sitting-room are the initials and date ^R_A 1655. One of the bedrooms is wainscoting, and the old oak staircase also remains. The house is have been built by an officer of Cromwell's army; it is now the property Wallroth, Esq., and is occupied by his gardener. Mickleover House is a modern residence with beautiful gardens and pleasure grounds, from which extensive and beautiful views of the surrounding country are obtained. The property and residence of Mr. Wallroth, who purchased the house about seventeen years ago. The Pastures is a large and well-built situated on the Burton road, about three miles from Derby. It was built early part of the present century for the Misses Peel, and was subsequently occupied by Leaper Newton, Esq. It was purchased by Sir Seymour Blar about the year 1840, and in 1879 it was purchased by Abraham (afterwards Abraham) Woodiwiss for £15,000. The estate contains 88 acres. Abraham is said to have expended about £15,000 on improvements. After he left it to his widow until the youngest child was of age, and in May, 1894, was offered for sale by public auction, but failed to secure a purchaser. House, the property and residence of E. J. Wade, Esq., is a modern erected on old foundation. On a stone in the cellar is inscribed G.W., 1694.

The Derbyshire County Lunatic Asylum is situated in this parish. A handsome building of brick with stone groins and dressings, in the Elizabethan style, erected in 1851-2. The total cost of the buildings, furniture, and of land was £147,886. The internal arrangements have been made with consideration for the comfort and health of the inmates in every respect. The asylum is regarded as a model of what such institutions should be, and accommodation for 464 patients, and there are 460 at present in the hospital.

CHARITIES.—Robert Newton, Esq., in 1784, left £200 to the poor, the interest to be distributed on the 4th November yearly in money and warm clothing alternately. The in 1678, left a rent-charge of 12s to poor widows. The sum of £52 is invested in the London and South-Western railway in the name of George Wade, and the interest (£3) is distributed varying from 2s. 6d. to 7s. 6d. by Mr. E. J. Wade, the surviving executor. The £6 12s. 11d is received from Gisborne's bequest, and distributed by the vicar in flannel clothing.

MUGGINTON.

Mugginton is an ecclesiastical parish, comprising Mugginton, Mercaston, Sedale Park, and Weston-Underwood. For all rating and civil purposes Mugginton has been merged in Weston-Underwood since 1886, and as a township now lost its identity. The parish is partly in the hundred of Appletree and partly in that of Morleston and Litchurch, the electoral division of Brailsford, the sessional division and county court district of Derby, poor law union of Derby, and deanery of Duffield.

WESTON-UNDERWOOD township, which also now includes that of Mugginton, contains an area, according to the Ordnance Survey, of 3,177 acres; its rateable value is £4,495; and the population in 1891 was 375. The principal landowners are Lord Scarsdale; J. G. Crompton, Esq., Windley; James Burton, Mercaston; and the trustees of Duffield School.

The manor of Mogintune (Mugginton), at the time of the Domesday Survey, was held by Chetel, under Henry de Ferrers, and there was then a church and a priest at Mugginton. Shortly afterwards it came into the possession of Walkelin. This line terminated in two coheiresses, who married Sir Chandos and Sir William Stafford, and held the manor and rectory in moieties. The former moiety, after several descents, came to Sir John Chandos, the famous warrior in the French wars of Edward III. Sir John was never married, and at his death his moiety was inherited by his three sisters. One sister married Robert Laughton; and their daughter and heiress, Elizabeth, the wife of Pole, eventually succeeded to the other two shares also. The Stafford moiety some time afterwards came to four coheiresses. Three of these shares were subsequently conveyed to Sir John Chandos, and passed with the other moiety to the Poles. One of the latter family granted the original Chandos moiety to William Dethick, in exchange for other lands. Subsequently, about the year 1500, Elizabeth, the Kniveton of Mercaston purchased the various shares of the rectory, and in 1654 Sir Andrew Kniveton, of Bradley, sold the manor of Mugginton to Nathaniel Hallowes, and the estate and manorial right were recently purchased from this family by Lord Scarsdale.

The village of Mugginton is seated on an eminence 7 miles N.W. of Derby. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is an ancient and venerable edifice seated on an eminence, and forming a prominent feature in the landscape. It comprises chancel, with south chapel, nave, south aisle, and porch, and a west tower. The building exhibits various architectural styles, indicating restoration at the periods when these several styles prevailed. The tower, or rather the lower part of it, for the upper part has been rebuilt, belongs undoubtedly to the church that was standing here at the time of the Domesday Survey. The semi-circular archway in the west end, long bricked up and whitewashed, has been opened out during the present year, and during the work there were discovered to be three archways, one above the other. It is to be regretted that the funds were not forthcoming at the time for a thorough restoration of the tower and chancel, as both need speedy reparation. The south chapel was an addition to the south aisle, about the middle of the 15th century, probably by the Kniveton family. It is divided from the aisle by a good old oak screen, still in fair preservation, and from the chancel by two pointed arches. In this chapel is the altar tomb of Sir Nicholas Kniveton, of Mercaston and Underwood, and Joanna, his wife, who died in 1400. On the upper marble slab are brass plates of the knight, his wife, and their children, and four shields, and there are also shields of arms on the wall above the tomb. The knight is in plate armour, with a long sword in front; his horse rests on his helmet, which is decorated with a remarkable crest—a fox, or a dog, snarling at its own reflection in a circular mirror; at his feet is a mastiff. The lady has long flowing hair, and wears an ermined jacket and mantle. There were originally the figures of six children, but one was stolen many years ago, and only a fragment of the inscription remains. On the north side of the chancel, in the churchyard, is a large vault, the entrance to which is beneath the chancel floor. This vault belonged to the Sanders family, of Little Ireton. Sir Thomas Sanders, M.P., a colonel in Cromwell's Ironsides, purchased Little Ireton from the Iretons, and built this vault for the family burial place. He died in 1654. The vault also contains the bodies of two ladies of the Pole family. On the east wall of the chancel there is a marble tablet to the memory of the Rev. S. Pole, who held the rectories of Mugginton and Radbourne, and died in 1700. The font is hexagonal in shape—an unusual pattern—and ornamented with quatrefoil moulding. A brass plate on the base is thus inscribed, "Anno Domini 1500, rescued from decay by the family of Webster, of Mercaston, whose ancestors for the last 200 years have received herein the rite of baptism." The windows in the church are of a heterogeneous character; some are open benches of pine; behind these are nine low-backed benches of solid oak, to which the following inscription refers:—"William Jenkinson gave to this church XXX s. for nine made theise formes, Anno Domini MDC." There are a few low oaken pews in the south aisle. There are no stained-glass windows, but at the Herald's Window, in 1611, there was a rich display of heraldic glass. Much of the doubtlessly destroyed by the iconoclasts of Cromwell's time; but even so late as 1845, when the church was restored, the old oak chancel screen was broken up, and many other relics of antiquity disappeared. The tower contains a clock, without dial, and four bells. Two of the latter, according to a very probable tradition, belonged to Breadsall Priory, to which house half the rectory had been appropriated. The registers begin in 1674. Of five burials recorded from 1729 to the middle of that century four are women over 100 years of age. Sarah Bratby, who died in 1755, was "110 years old."

The living is a rectory, worth £430 a year, in the gift of R. Chandos-Pole, Esq., and held by the Rev. R. Feilden, B.A., since 1869. There are two fine yew trees in the churchyard; one, according to the registers, was planted by the Rev. Samuel Pole, rector of the parish, in 1732. The other is said to have stood there at least 10 centuries; its trunk is now hollow, and is held together by iron bands. The cavity in the trunk is large enough to hold 16 persons.

The school, which stands near the rectory house, was built in 1840, and has an endowment, left by the Rev. Samuel Pole in 1746, for which 20 boys were formerly taught free. The feast is held on the first Sunday after All Saints' Day (November 1st).

Weston Underwood is a village on the Derby and Wirksworth road, and an estate containing 1,368 acres, belonging solely to Lord Scarsdale, who is also lord of the manor. The estate belonged to the Kniveton, who had a seat here, and remained with the family till the impoverishment of Sir Andrew Kniveton, the Royalist, when it was purchased by the Curzons. The site of the old hall may still be traced on Park View Farm, occupied by Mr. W. Ratcliff Wardle; and in a field hard by is one of the finest springs of soft water in the county. Hall Close, one mile W. of the village, is another farm, the name of which indicates its connection with the old mansion.

Weston Lodge, the residence of the Hon. A. N. Curzon, captain and hon. major, 3rd Derbyshire Regiment, is pleasantly situated in its own grounds. The house was rebuilt in 1831. In a meadow near the roadside, in the vicinity of Kedleston Park, is a building in a very florid style of architecture, known as the Gothic Temple. It was built by the first Lord Scarsdale about 1760, as a summer house or pleasure resort. Near it is Little Ireton, now called Ireton Farm, the ancient seat of the Ireton family, from whom it was purchased by Sir Thomas Sanders. The site of their old hall and garden can be traced at the back of the present farm premises.

Weston Underwood is in the Morleston and Litchurch hundred.

MERCASTON is an adjoining township, containing 1,157 acres of fertile land, owned solely by R. W. Chandos-Pole, Esq. The ratable value is £1,875, and the population in 1891 was 97. The manor of Merchenestune (Mercaston), it is recorded in Domesday Book, was held by Robert and Roger, under Henry de Ferrers. A branch of the Kniveton was seated here as early as the reign of Edward III. They were probably the builders of the south chapel in Mugginton Church, where the monument of Sir Nicholas Kniveton still remains. William Kniveton, of Mercaston, was one of the baronets created by King James soon after the institution of the order in 1611. Sir Andrew Kniveton, the third baronet, was a zealous Royalist, and was governor of Tutbury Castle for the King. His loyalty to the Crown brought upon him the vengeance of the Roundheads, and he was so greatly impoverished that he was obliged to sell most of his estates. This manor was purchased by an ancestor of the present owner. The Hall, the ancient seat of the Kniveton, is now a farmhouse. Three adjoining farms, bearing the name of Wild Park, had probably some connection with the hall. On one, some trenches are still visible, but when or for what purpose they were constructed is not known. Another field, bearing the name of Castle Moor, is surrounded by a moat.

This township is in Ashbourne union and county court district.

RAVENSDALE PARK is a small township containing 634 acres, lying about one mile N.W. of Mugginton. Its ratable value is £557, and the population in 1891 was 51. Lord Scarsdale is the principal owner and lord of the manor. trustees of Ashbourne Grammar School own 28a. 1r. 35p., and R Chandos-Pole, Esq., has 8½ acres. A mill is mentioned in the Domesday Survey and traces of the dam are still visible. The estate belonged to the Kniveton and was sold by Sir Andrew Kniveton in 1649 to William Bache, Esq., whom it was purchased in 1673 by Sir John Curzon.

On the farm occupied by Mr. James Slack there is a spring of sulphur water, but it has not obtained any reputation for possessing curative qualities.

NEWHALL.

Newhall, formerly a chapelry under Stapenhill, now an independent parish, embraces the joint township of Stanton and Newhall, comprising 1,728 acres of land, belonging chiefly to the Earl of Carnarvon, A. M. Blake, Esq., Messrs. Nadin, and Mr. A. Higginson. The ratable value is £15,271, of which £1,215 is assessed on the Midland Railway Co. for the portion of their line lying within the township; the population in 1891 was 4,635. The parish is in the hundred of Repton and Gresley, electoral division of Stanton and Newhall, petty sessional division of Swadlincote; poor law union and county court district of Burton-on-Trent; and deanery of Repton. The soil is light and sandy, and about three-fourths of it are in pasture. Several seams of coal underlie the parish, and between the two seams of main coal is a band of fire clay about two feet six inches in thickness.

Stanton occupies the western side of the township. This manor, at the time of the Domesday Survey, was held by Henry de Ferrers. In the reign of Edward I., the manors of Newhall, Stanton Ward, and Heathcote Ward, belonged to the family of de la Ward. Joan, daughter and heiress of Robert de la Ward, married a Meynell, and the estates sometime afterwards passed, by the marriage of a Meynell heiress, to Roger Dethick, whose descendants resided at Newhall for six generations. Katherine Dethick, the heiress of this family, in the first half of the 17th century, married Alexander Redishe, and their elder daughter and coheiress married Sir Robert Darcy. Edward Darcy, their son, left four daughters and coheiresses who married Barnes, Philipps, Milward, and Rokesby. The Earl of Chesterfield purchased two shares, and the remainder having passed into the Stanhope family, Earl Stanhope and his son sold their portion in parcels. In 1783, William Nadin purchased two quarter shares of the minerals of Stanton and Newhall, and also two quarter shares of the lordship of the manors, which shares are now in the possession of his children. The Earl of Chesterfield's portion has passed to the Earl of Carnarvon.

Newhall is a large village, chiefly inhabited by colliers, who work at the Bretby and Stanton pits. It is situated three miles S. by E. from Burton-on-Trent, and is about three-quarters of a mile from Swadlincote station, on the Midland railway. There was a chapel here in the eleventh century, which was included in the grant of the mother church (Stapenhill) to Burton Abbey, but it appears to have been discontinued after the Reformation, and is not mentioned by the Parliamentary Commissioners in 1650. The present church, dedicated to St. John, was erected at the sole expense of the Rev. John Clay and family, and opened for divine service in 1832. It is a neat edifice of brick, in the Gothic style, consisting of chancel, nave, and western tower. The total cost, including the erection of parsonage and schools, was £7,000. The church was restored, and several improvements effected in 1893, at an expense of £250. The chancel has been decorated, the nave seated with open benches of pitchpine, and its flat ceiling replaced by an open-timbered roof. The living is a vicarage, in the gift of trustees, and incumbency of the Rev. Edgar Henry Rand, M.A., Trinity College, Dublin.

The Wesleyans erected their first chapel here in 1816. The present one in High Street was built in 1882, at a cost of £1,335, exclusive of the site which was purchased previously. A sect calling themselves "Christians gathered to the name of the Lord" worship in the old Wesleyan chapel. The members of the United Methodist Free Church and the Primitive Methodists have places of worship here. The Catholic Church, dedicated to St. Edward the Confessor built by the Countess of Loudoun in 1886, at a cost of £1,500. The st Gothic, and the red brick of which it is built is relieved by Mansfield dressings. In the front gable is a statue of the patron saint. It is also us a day school, which is attended by 130 children.

A School Board for Stanton and Newhall was formed in 1891, and the national schools at High Street, Oversetts, and Stanton were taken over b Board. Handsome school premises have been recently erected at a co £9,000. They occupy a central situation in Bretby Road, and will supersed schools at Oversetts and High Street. Stanton school has also been conside enlarged and otherwise improved during the present year.

A Memorial Hall was erected in 1874, by Anne, Countess of Chesterfie memory of her son, George, seventh Earl of Chesterfield. It was used for time as a Literary Institute, but has now been closed for three or four years.

A private market is held every Friday night from 7 to 10 in the M Place, in connection with the Horse and Jockey. This inn was formerly rendezvous of cockfighters, and many persons still living have here witnesse brutal sport. The Wakes are held between the 12th and 19th of July, and local Horticultural Society holds a show on the Wednesday during Wake w

NEWTON SOLNEY.

Newton Solney is a parish containing 1,400 acres of land, lying on the eastern boundary of the borough of Burton-on-Trent, in the hundred of R and Gresley, petty sessional division and deanery of Repton, county electoral division of Repton and Swadlincote, county court district and poor union of Burton-on-Trent. The ratable value is £3,980, and the population Robert Ratcliff, Esq., Newton Park, is lord of the manor and principal owner; the other large proprietors are the Earl of Carnarvon, Exors. Henry Every, Bart., Mr. W. H. Marbrow, T. H. Hopkins, Mrs. Holbrooke Miss Wayte.

The manor was held at an early period by the knightly family of S under the Ferrers. Sir Norman de Solney held it under Robert de Ferrers reign of Henry III. After five descents the male line became extinct, and manor passed by the marriage of a coheiress to Sir Nicholas Longford. the reign of Henry VIII. it was purchased from the Longfords by the L and the heiress of the latter family, in the reign of James I., brought marriage to Sir Simon Every. It was purchased from Sir Henry Flower I about 20 years ago, by Mr. Ratcliff.

The village of Newton Solney is pleasantly situated on the Burton and Epton road, three miles from the former and $1\frac{1}{4}$ from the latter place. It contains many good houses, and is lighted by gas. The allotment system is in operation. Five acres of land are let to the cottagers in portions of one-eighth of an acre each at 7s. 6d. per annum, and prizes are given by Mr. Ratcliff for the best exhibits each year. The same gentleman has also set apart a field near the village for cricket, football, and other healthy recreation. The church, which is dedicated to the Blessed Virgin, is a handsome edifice, consisting of a chancel with north chapel, nave, side aisles, south porch, and small tower surmounted by an octagonal spire at the west end. It was originally a chapel to Epton, and is supposed to have been built by the monks of that place in the thirteenth century, many traces of the original Norman work still remaining. It appears to have been largely rebuilt when the Decorated Gothic style prevailed, and several alterations were subsequently made in the Perpendicular style. In 1811 the whole fabric was thoroughly restored at a cost of £5,000, of which the sum of £2,000 was contributed by R. Ratcliff, Esq., and £1,000 by the Misses Ratcliff. E. D. Salt, Esq., and the late Mr. Higgott were also large contributors. The north chapel, which is a continuation of the aisle, is separated from the chancel by two Gothic arches. It is supposed to have been the chantry, or mortuary chapel, of the Solney family, ancient lords of the manor. It is now an organ chamber and vestry. The east window of the chancel, of three lights, with perpendicular tracery, was inserted in 1862, in memory of the Rev. J. Wilson, M.A., former vicar of the parish. There is another three-light window in the south side, in memory of Calvert, second son of Wm. Worthington, Esq., who died in 1871. The aisles are separated from the nave by three low pointed arches, supported by octagonal columns. There is a very fine stained glass memorial window of three lights at the west end of the south aisle to Sarah, widow of the late Samuel Ratcliff, Esq., of Cliff House, who died in 1868. The font, which is octagonal, is believed to be of 14th century date. There are three bells in the tower, one of which bears the legend, "Sancte Maria ora pro nobis," and is supposed to be about 600 years old. Under the belfry are two ancient monuments, which were removed from their former situations when the church was re-seated in 1881; and another lies in a recess at the west end of the south aisle. There can be no reasonable doubt that they represent some of the Solney family, but it is impossible to assign them to any particular members. The effigies are those of mail-clad knights; one is without the head, and another has lost the lower part of both legs. The third, of alabaster, is in an excellent state of preservation, and is especially interesting, as it shows every detail of the armour of the period. Here also lie two incised tombstones, which were found during the restoration of the church. The large marble monument of Sir Henry Every, who died in 1709, is also now under the belfry. We may mention one interesting tombstone in the north-east angle of the churchyard. It is that of Thomas Gafere, an eminent architect of his day, who restored Henry VII.'s chapel and the Hall at Westminster. He died at Newton Solney, October 20th, 1877, aged 72.

The living is a donative, of the yearly value of £20, to which Mr. Ratcliff, patron, adds £230. The Rev. F. C. T. Jansen, M.A., is the vicar.

The National School was built by Sir Henry Flower Every, in 1860, and is attended by 75 children. In the village are four almshouses, founded and endowed by the late Mr. John Higgott, in 1876, for the aged deserving poor of the parish of the age of 60 or upwards. The inmates are chosen by the trustees, and receive a sum of six shillings each per week.

Newton Park, the residence and property of R. Ratcliff, Esq., is pleasantly situated at the west end of the village, overlooking the Trent. The grounds are embellished by mounds, lake, and rockery. The wildness of nature is imitated in the Hardy Fernery. Here has been rebuilt one of the arches taken from old Epton bridge. The house is lighted throughout by electricity.

"The Rock," the residence of E. D. Salt, Esq., is pleasantly situated on the bank of the Trent, a little below the confluence of the river Dove.

NORMANTON.

Normanton, or Old Normanton, as it is sometimes called by way of distinction, is a considerable village and parish lying on the outskirts of Derby, with a borough a portion of it has been incorporated. The parish embraces 1,110 acres and had, in 1891, a population of 1,186. It is in the hundred of Regis Gresley; petty sessional division, county court district and deanery of Derby and rural district of Shardlow. It is under the control of a parish of seven members, and returns two guardians and district councillors. John Shaw, Robert Radford, Woodroffe's Trustees, and R. St. A. and Roumiew, are the principal landowners.

The village, two miles S. from Derby, and near Pear Tree and Nocton station, on the Midland railway, occupies an elevated situation, commands extensive prospects, stretching as far as Breedon Church, in Leicestershire. The houses are mostly of the modern villa type, but a few quaint old cottages the only visible proof it now has of any claim to antiquity, except its name, which carries it back to Norman times. It had, in those days, its chapel, which was subordinate to St. Peter's, Derby, and in recent years the living was united conjointly with that of St. Peter's. The population having outgrown the capacity of the little chapel, the present church of the same dedication—Giles—was rebuilt on the same site in 1862. It is a neat edifice, in the English style, and consists of chancel, nave, south aisle, and a western tower surmounted by an octagonal spire. The stained east window, representing the Ascension, is a memorial of Ann Buck, wife of Robert Radford, who died in 1645. The font, which belonged to the old chapel, is octagonal in shape, and of ancient date. The communion plate, consisting of a silver chalice and paten, was presented by Lady Barbara Harpur in 1645, and bears the arms of the family. The Incorporated Society for Building, &c., Churches, grant is the cost of erection, and, in consequence, all the sittings, 301 in number, are, but subject to annual allotment by the churchwardens, suitable provision made for the poorer inhabitants. The living is now a rectory, worth £210, in the gift of R. Smith, Esq., and other five trustees, and held by the Rev. Herbert Price, M.A. (T.C., D.), who is also acting-chaplain at the Barracks. A tomb of Martin IV., who held the Pontificate in the latter part of the 13th century, was dug up in the churchyard in 1893, and is now in possession of the rector.

There are two Nonconformist chapels in the village, belonging to the Congregationalists and Primitive Methodists respectively.

Under the provisions of the Education Act a School Board was formed, and, in 1894, excellent school premises were erected at a cost of £2,000, and a spacious schoolroom was added in 1894.

Normanton is the headquarters of the 45th Regimental District or Derby Regiment. The Barracks form an immense block of buildings, erected in 1861 at a cost of £50,000, including the purchase of 14 acres of ground, and, in 1862, ten acres adjoining the south and east side have been purchased by the Office for recreation purposes. There is a permanent staff of 65 stationed at the barracks, and recruits swell the number to between 200 and 300. The latter are sent on furlough every six weeks. This is also the headquarters for all the militia and auxiliary forces in the two counties of Derby and Nottingham.

Money Order, Telegraph Office, and Savings Bank; John Dale, postmaster, Newdigate street. Office open from 7 to 7. Letters from Derby arrive at 6-45 a.m., and at 5 p.m. for Derby only; and are despatched at 3-20 and 6-45 p.m.

OSMASTON-BY-DERBY.

This parish comprises 930 acres of land lying on the S.E. side of Derby without the borough boundary, in the hundred of Repton and Gresley sessional division, county court district and deanery of Derby, and in the rural district of Shardlow. It is valued for rating purposes at £7,800, and in 1891, a population of 2,067. The land, which is mostly in grass, chiefly to Sir Robert Rodney Wilmot, Bart., of Bracknell, Berkshire.

Osmaston (Osmundistune in Domesday Book) was held at an early date under the Ferrers by the family of Dun, or Dunne, whose chief residence was Breadsall. The next owners were the Fouchers, whose heiress, in the 13th century, married a Bradshaw. Early in the 17th century the estate was purchased by Robert Wilmot, of Chaddesden, who left it to his second son, Nicholas Wilmot, Knt., serjeant-at-law. Robert Wilmot, Esq., was for 20 years Secretary to the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland, and was created a baronet in 1772. He died the same year, and was succeeded, pursuant to the limits of the patent, by Sir Robert Wilmot. The latter gentleman married, first, Elizabeth, daughter of Admiral the Hon. John Byron, by whom he had three sons, Robert John, who succeeded as third baronet, and, secondly, Mary, daughter and heiress of Charles Howard, Esq., by whom he had three sons, Charles Foley, Eardley Nicholas, and Montagu. The present baronet, the fourth son of Montagu, succeeded his cousin, the Rev. Sir George Lewis Wilmot, the late baronet, in 1887.

The Hall, the residence of the family for nearly two centuries, is a large and rather imposing mansion, erected about the year 1680, and pleasantly situated within its own grounds. It is now, together with 280 acres of land, the property of the Midland Railway Company. A portion of the park is used as a golf course by the Derby Golf Club, and is excellently adapted for the purpose.

The village of Osmaston, which is of considerable extent, is situated about a mile south by east from Derby. The church, an ancient edifice comprising chancel, nave, and tower, is supposed to have been originally founded before the Norman Conquest. It is mentioned in 1155, when Robert de Dun transferred all his rights in the church to the Abbot of Darley. This grant was confirmed by the Bishop of Lincoln and Lichfield, the abbot paying one mark yearly to the Mother Church of St. Peter, Derby. Another mark of its subjection to St. Peter's was the very condition that attached to its privilege of sepulture, single persons only being allowed to be buried in its churchyard, the bodies of householders and persons being carried for interment to the Mother Church. This custom prevailed till 1349, when the "Black Death" or plague broke out in the parish, and so numerous were the deaths that it was found most inconvenient and difficult to carry the plague-smitten corpses to Derby; the bishop then granted permission for all parishioners, both married and single, to be buried in the churchyard.

Osmaston. In 1357, Robert Foucher founded a chantry, at the altar of the blessed Virgin Mary, and endowed it with lands and tenements in Osmaston and Derby for the maintenance of a priest to say Mass for the souls of his family. The chantry was abolished in the reign of Edward VI., and its endowments sold to Edward Pease and James Wilson. It stood on the south side of the nave, from which it was entered by two massive arches, now walled up. The church was thoroughly restored in 1881, at a cost of £600, but there is still a picturesque quaintness about it. Spencer Hall, who saw it in its unrestored state, thus speaks of it in his "Days in Derbyshire":—"At this Osmaston, near Derby, we will turn and linger awhile, glad that the gradual outstretching of the town still leaves the domain so beautiful; and we will seek its little church and bowery churchyard—one of the most attractive of all the sacred nooks we know. What a fitting shade is formed by these firs and yews! What an antiquated little temple, smothered in verdure, with its tiny bell-turret just peeping out!" The east window of three lights is filled with stained glass, representing the Last Supper, the Crucifixion, and the Resurrection. A single light on the north side of the chancel is a memorial of the daughter of the late Sir Robert Wilmot, Bart. There are a few Wilmot memorials, the oldest being that of Sir Nicholas Wilmot, 1st., serjeant-at-law, who died in 1682. The communion service is an interesting relic of bygone times. The chalice is very rare, and dates from the reign of Elizabeth; the paten is of the time of Queen Anne. All the old registers have been lost, the oldest one, now extant, commences in 1743. The dedication has been generally ascribed to All Saints, but Dr. Cox says that there are numerous entries in the Lichfield Registers proving the true dedication to be St. James. The living is a vicarage, worth £107, in the gift of Sir Robert R. Wilmot, Bart., and held by the Rev. Geo. T. Hutchinson (Oxford University and Yorkshire Exhibitioner), since 1862; curate, the Rev. T. E. M. Hutchinson, B.A., T.C., D. The church will accommodate 120, and all the sittings are free.

Scholastic affairs are under the management of a School Board of five members, by whom commodious schools were erected in 1892, at a cost of £4,000, to accommodate 450 children.

Its waters are said Malvern, and hence Quarndon has been styled the Malvern o is also a sulphur well in the village, to which many p cure of cutaneous and other diseases. The village is ligh part of the tower, which was allowed to remain as a memento of the past. This tower is now picturesquely mantled in ivy, and requires a close approach to see what lies beneath the green covering. There is no record of the dedication, but tradition assigns it to St. Paul. The new church, also dedicated to St. Paul, was built in 1872, at a cost of £4,880, exclusive of the site, which was given by Lord Scarsdale, who also contributed £500 towards the erection. It is a handsome edifice of stone, in the Gothic style, and consists of chancel, nave, north and south aisles, south porch, and a tower, surmounted by a spire, at the south-west corner. The nave is separated from the aisle on each side by four pointed arches springing from circular pillars, with moulded capitals. The chancel arch is supported on each side by a demi-angel, represented in the attitude of prayer. The ceiling of the chancel is panelled in wood, with carved bosses at the inter-sections, and the floor is laid with ornamental tiles. The organ stands on the north side of the chancel, and there are stalls for the choristers. The nave and aisles are fitted with open benches to seat 366. The pulpit and desk are of carved oak, and are a memorial of Ann, wife of Dr. Cheetham, Bishop of Sierra Leone, and formerly vicar of Quarndon. The church is lighted with gas, and two handsome lamps have been erected at the entrance. The cost of the latter (about £15) was collected by the young men of the village. The living is a vicarage, worth £150 per annum, with residence, in the gift of Lord Scarsdale, and held by the Rev. William Nourse (K.C., London) since 1871.

The Wesleyan Chapel, a neat brick building, was erected in 1859, at a cost of £300.

CHARITIES.—Sir John Curzon, of Kedleston, by will in 1725 left £20 for the education of poor children of Kedleston, Quarndon, Weston, and Ravensdale Park, and expressed the wish that the master should be in holy orders, and read prayers and preach in Quarndon Chapel, for which he was to receive £10. New school premises, with master's house attached, were erected in 1861. It is mixed, and has an average attendance of 55. Adrian Mundy, of Quarndon Hall, who died in 1677, left £3 yearly to the minister of Quarndon, £1 to the clerk, £1 to the poor, and 2s. to the person distributing the same.

RADBOURNE.

This is a parish and township containing 2,137 acres of land, but solely, the glebe excepted, to R. W. Chandos-Pole, Esq., who is also lord manor. The soil is heavy and cold, and is chiefly in grass for dairy purposes. The total ratable value of the land and property is £4,137, and the population in 1891 was 230. Radbourne is in the hundred of Appletree, electoral division of Brailsford, petty sessional division and county court district of Derby, parish union of Burton-on-Trent, rural district of Repton, and deanery of Long

When Domesday Survey was drawn up, Radbourne was one of the manors pertaining to Henry de Ferrers, and shortly afterwards it was held by the Ferrers by Robert Walkelin. The two daughters and coheirresses of his son, married Sir John Chandos and Sir William Stafford. The former, by some arrangement, obtained the manor of Radbourne. Sir John Chandos, one of the original Knights of the Garter and an illustrious warrior in the wars of Edward III., died in 1370, unmarried, leaving three sisters, the eldest of whom married Sir John Laughton, and their only daughter, Elizabeth, eventually sole heiress of the Chandos property, became the wife of Peter Pole, from whom the estate has descended to the present owner. Ralph Pole, of Radbourne, was one of the judges of the King's Bench in 1452. Sir Peter Pole, a distinguished commander, who served against the Spanish Armada, made a knight banneret for his services in Ireland.

The Hall, the seat of Reginald Walkelin Chandos-Pole, Esq., is a building of brick with a stone basement, erected in 1681, and with an enlarged addition of a new wing in 1874. It stands within a well-wooded park, and commands from its elevated situation extensive views of the adjacent country.

The village of Radbourne is small and straggling, and is situated about three miles W. from Derby and two miles from Mickleover station on the Northern railway. The church, dedicated to St. Andrew, is an ancient building of stone, chiefly in the Decorated Gothic style, consisting of chancel, nave, and aisle, with a tower at the west end, in which are three bells. It was restored and repewed in 1888. The chancel was re-roofed, and a new east window inserted in memory of Mrs. Chandos-Pole. The plaster has been stripped off the walls, revealing a hagioscope or squint between the north aisle and chancel. The font has been mounted on a new base of red marble. The cover is a fine old woodwork once belonging to Dale Abbey, and the carved panels of the choir pew were also brought from the same place. A new carved oak screen was erected at the late restoration, and a new organ placed in the chancel. The latter was the gift of the present rector. The east end of the north aisle was formerly the chapel of Our Lady, and the burial place of the Poles. Here, on a raised tomb, are the alabaster effigies of a knight and his lady, said to be Peter de la Pole, and Elizabeth his wife, who died in 1432. Not far from the altar tomb, on the upper slab of which are incised the figures of a man and a woman, with an inscription recording the burial place of Ralph Pole, judge of the Common Pleas, and Johanna his wife. The latter died in 1454. An ancient monument lies under the east window of the aisle, but the date (1439) is legible; and against the north wall is the large marble monument of German Pole, who died in 1684. The registers date from 1572. The living is a vicarage.

y, net value £360, with residence, in the gift of R. W. Chandos-Pole, Esq., held by the Rev. William Chandos-Pole, M.A. (Christ Church, Oxford.) are 130 acres of glebe.

A new school, with teacher's house attached, was erected near the church in lieu of the old school on the Common, founded by German Pole, Esq., in

It is endowed with £20 per annum, and the founder left also a yearly sum apprenticing six poor children, viz., one from each of the following places:—Radbourne, Markeaton, Mickleover, Mackworth, Mercaston, and Dalbury Lees.

REPTON.

This is a parish and township in the hundred of Repton and Gresley, petty division and deanery of Repton, county court district and poor-law of Burton-on-Trent, electoral division of Repton and Swadlincote. For carrying out the provisions of the Local Government Act of 1894 there is a Parish Council of seven members, and the parish elects two rural district councillors. Its area is 4,917 acres, rateable value £11,462, and the number of inhabitants in 1871 was 1,783. Sir Francis Burdett, Bart., Foremark Hall, and Sir V. H. Esq., Bart., Calke Abbey, are the principal landowners and joint lords of the manor. Mrs. M. Holbrooke, Repton; Exors. of John Higgott; Robt. Ratcliffe, Newton Park; and the Governors of Repton School are also large landowners here.

The village of Repton is situated amidst some lovely pastoral scenery on the south side of the Trent, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles N.E. from Burton-on-Trent, $7\frac{1}{2}$ S.S.W. from Derby, and one mile from the station of Repton and Willington on the South Midland railway. It consists chiefly of one street about a mile in length, and clean with something of a cathedral-like air about it. Though now a village of little significance, either politically or commercially, time was when it was the capital of Mercia, and the residence of its kings. It is even said to have been known to the Romans, from whom it is supposed to have received the name of Reptunum. About half-a-mile north of the village is a curious rectangular work measuring about 72 yards by 53 yards. It was apparently a military camp, and is locally known as the "Burial," which has probably some connection with the old Saxon Burh, of which the modernised form is "Bury," signifying a stronghold or camp. The great Roman road, named Rykneild Street, passes within two miles of Repton, and it is not improbable that the Romans may have had a temporary camp here; but if this were so their occupation passed without leaving a single trace behind. Within the embankments are two very elevated mounds, which Mr. F. C. Hipkins, in his little work, "Repton:

Village, Abbey, Church, Priory, and School," regards as tumuli or burial mounds and adduces the local name "Buries" as supporting his view.

Nothing is recorded of the state or condition of Repton in early Saxon times, and even its claim to the metropolitan honours of the Mercian Kingdom wholly on tradition. Excavations in the churchyard and adjoining field have shown bare traces of buildings, showing the position of the early Saxon village. Trent then flowed close by, in the channel now called the "Old Trent," and was navigable up to 1777; and even as late as the summer of 1816, says Bigsby, "parties were enabled to take boat from the Priory and visit All Saints Church, about two miles distant."

Peada, son of the doughty old pagan Penda, King of Mercia, embraced Christianity as the price of receiving the hand of the Northumbrian princess Alchfleda, daughter of the sainted Oswald, who was slain in battle by the old heathen. Succeeding his father on the throne of Mercia in 655, he fixed his residence at Repton, and applied himself to the conversion of his countrymen, in which work he was assisted by four priests from Northumbria—Cedda, Betti, and Diuma. Diuma was consecrated the first bishop of Mercia. Repton was the episcopal residence until the removal of the see to Lichfield. Peada soon afterwards fell by the hand of an assassin, and his younger brother Wulfhere was chosen to rule over Mercia. He had also embraced Christianity, but his conversion, according to monkish legends, was marked by a considerable amount of fickleness.

About this time, and probably by Wulfhere, a monastery was founded at Repton, which, according to the old Saxon custom, was inhabited by both monks and nuns under the rule of an abbess. Very little has been recorded of this early convent, and tradition has embalmed little more than its memory. The names of the abbesses only have come down to our time—Vereburga, daughter of Wulfhere; Eadburga, daughter of Adulph, King of the East Angles; Alfrida, and Kenreda. Amongst the kings of Mercia known to have been interred within its walls were Ethelbald and Withlaf, and many others are said to have been buried there. Amongst the endowments of the convent was the manor of Wirksworth, with its lead mines, and it is recorded that Eadburga, the abbess, in 714, sent a coffin to Croyland for the burial of St. Guthlac. Repton is closely connected with this holy hermit. Guthlac was of noble blood, and whilst still in his youth distinguished himself by his fiery zeal and savage bravery in many a hard battle. Listening at length to the voice of the Church, at the early age of twenty-four he renounced the world, and retired to the Abbey of Repton. Desiring greater seclusion than the walls of a monastery offered, in the autumn of 714 he quitted the abbey, entered a small boat without oar, sail, or rudder, commending himself to the guidance of Providence, and determined to reside where the boat should land him. He drifted down the Trent, and the boat stranded on the island of Croyland, in the Fens of Lincolnshire, where he built himself a cell, in which he passed the rest of his days.

Amongst other royal personages who were laid to rest within the walls of the priory, besides the two kings already mentioned, were Merewald, brother of Peada; Wimond, son of Withlaf, with Alfrida, his wife, and Wystan, a saintly son who was assassinated on the eve of Pentecost, A.D. 849, by his brother Berfert. Many miracles are said to have been wrought at his tomb, and he subsequently attained the honour of canonization.

The abbey flourished for 214 years. During the latter portion of this time the times were troublous; immense hordes of Danes made frequent incursions into the country, burning and pillaging the monasteries and churches, carrying death and desolation wherever they went. There was no combination amongst various tribes of the English for the expulsion of the common foe, and one was left either to fight almost unaided against them or to make terms on terms they could with the enemy. As early as 789, whilst Offa reigned over Mercia, "three ships of Northmen from Heretha land" came on the shores of Wessex. Six years later another host landed on the coast of Northumbria.

overran that kingdom. Their visits were almost as regular as the summer season; the English seemed utterly unable to cope with them, and even the brilliant successes of King Alfred terminated in a compromise. They transferred their attention from one kingdom to another, and Mercia's turn came at last. In 874, the host, under Halfdene, overran Wessex and Mercia, and finally annexed the greater part of the latter. They fixed their quarters for the winter at Repton, destroyed the abbey and royal palace, and Burhred, the king, fled to Rome, where he died broken-hearted a few days after his arrival. The inmates of the monastery fled on the approach of the Danes, carrying the body of St. Wystan with them to Evesham. Repton thenceforth lost its importance, and for a while sinks into oblivion. The Danes, who had effected the conquest of the northern half of the country, renounced their heathen worship for Christianity, and peace and prosperity began to prevail again in the land. The fame of the abbey, and the hallowed remains that had therein found a resting place, were still deeply impressed in the minds of the Mercians, and, religious enthusiasm waking up to the past glories of monastic Repton, a church was built in the reign of Edgar the Peaceful, or a little earlier, on the site of, or close to the ancient abbey, and dedicated to St. Wystan, whose memory was yet fresh in their minds.

At the time of the Domesday Survey there were two priests attached to this church, which shows that the edifice was of considerable size and importance. The manor was then in the hands of the king, but soon afterwards it was granted to the Earl of Chester. The memory of the old abbey was still cherished by the people, and Maud, widow of Ranulph, fourth Earl, determined to revivify the hallowed spot with monastic life. In 1172, with the consent of her son, the fifth Earl, she founded a priory of Austin Canons, and dedicated it to the Blessed Trinity. She had previously established the canons at Calke, conditionally that that house should be subject to the Priory of Repton, whenever it should be founded. The original charter is transcribed by J. O. Halliwell, Esq., F.R.S., F.S.A., in "The Journal of the British Archaeological Association," October, 1851, and several other charters and deeds have been reprinted in Dr. Bigsby's "History of Repton."

The original endowment was enlarged by subsequent benefactions. Amongst the possessions of the priory were a moiety of the manor of Repton, the church of St. Wystan with all its chapels, the church of Badow in Essex, the churches of Croxall and Willington, and estates at Willington, Hartshorne, Tickenhall, and other places. The priory flourished for 366 years, doing the pious work for which it was founded, without let or hindrance; but evil days came in the reign of the eighth Henry. The royal voluptuary had squandered the vast wealth left him by his penurious father; the spoliation of monasteries offered a ready means of replenishing his exhausted coffers, and an impecunious aristocracy were eager to aid him in his scheme of plunder, in the hope that they might share in the booty. A visitation of religious houses was carried out by certain paid commissioners, who knew well what was expected of them by the king, and they gratified him by presenting a most deplorable picture of monastic life. There were probably some abuses—they are incidental to our human nature. One of the chosen twelve was a traitor, and amongst the vast number of religieuse it would be an astounding miracle if there were not some who disgraced their sacred calling. But what credence can be placed upon ex parte evidence collected by paid emissaries, who were sent forth with the set purpose of discovering some plausible excuse for the suppression of monasteries? The whole proceeding was full of injustice, and antagonistic to the spirit of the law, and never again may any monarch make with impunity evidence so obtained a ground for the spoliation and plunder of the Church.

The yearly income of Repton Priory at the time of its suppression was £180, and the community at that time consisted of a sub-prior and nine canons, who received pensions varying from £6 to £4. The decorations, statues, and all the furniture of the church were sold to Thomas Thacker, and upon terms equally favourable the buildings and lands were assigned to the same gentleman removed from Heage and took up his residence at the prior's lodge. Thacker did not long enjoy his property. Dying in 1548, he was succeeded by his son Gilbert, whom Fuller, in his Church History, thus facetiously notices: "The said Gilbert Thacker, being alarmed with the news that Queen Mary set up the abbey again (and fearing how large a reach such a precedent might have), upon a Sunday (belike the better day the better deed) called together the carpenters and masons of that county, and plucked down in one day (which work is a cripple in going up, but rides post in coming down) a most beautiful church belonging thereto, saying 'he would destroy the nest for fear the eagle should build therein again.'"

The remains of the priory are not extensive, but many beautiful carved stones may be seen built into the walls of barns and other buildings in the village. The priory was approached by a gate-house on the south, the gateway of which, with a small portion of the flanking wall, is still in situ, and forms the entrance to priory precincts. Above this was the porter's chamber, which was extant within the past century. Extending from this gateway, and the churchyard, was a range of buildings containing the almshouse, where alms food were daily distributed to the poor, and rooms where travellers and wayfarers could lodge for the night. The priory church, 180 feet in length, was cruciform in plan, with a tower rising from four clustered columns in the centre. The only one of these piers remains above ground. This church, so ruthlessly destroyed by Thacker the Vandal, is said to have been one of the most beautiful edifices in the country, and the beautiful carved stones and canopy heads, found in the recent excavations, show that it was rich in ornamentation. On each side of the nave was an aisle, six bays in length, the arches resting on clustered pillars; each transept was also divided by two similar arches. The step leading into the choir is still in situ, but much hollowed by the constant tread of the monks. The Hall, the residence of the Thackers, was rebuilt in the reign of William Mary, but much of the old work was incorporated in the new. A brick tower, the original building, two stages high, with projecting turrets at the angles, remains unaltered, and is a very fine specimen of mediæval brickwork. It is generally said to have been the Prior's Lodge, but Mr. Hipkins in his "Repton Village, Abbey, Church, Priory, and School," considers that it was the Infirmatorium for sick monks. The Grammar School occupies a portion of the most ancient buildings, but much altered and enlarged. The Schoolroom was once the hall or refectory of the priory, and at the north end was the dormitory, with a groined roof of stone. Below this was a large hall divided into two alleys by a row of massive Norman pillars, four of which remain in situ. The priory mill, and the arch through which water was admitted from the mill race, are still to be seen in the wall which encloses the priory grounds.

In 1866, whilst the Grammar school boys were levelling a piece of unimproved grass land within the abbey wall, they discovered the remains of a tile kiln consisting of two arched chambers, filled with clay, charcoal, and tiles, many of which were broken or kiln damaged. Encaustic tiles have been frequently found at Repton, but it was not until the discovery of the kiln that the place of their manufacture was known. Some of the designs are rich and elaborate, requiring 16 tiles to complete the pattern, others four tiles, and some are singles. Tiles of these designs have been found at Tickenhall, Bakewell Church, Thurgarton Park, Kegworth, and other places, which were most undoubtedly made by the monks of Repton.

The priory estate remained in the possession of the Thackers for six generations. Godfrey Thacker, great grandson of Thomas, the original grantee, married Jane, daughter of Sir Richard Harpur, of Littleover, and Gilbert, his son, by his wife, Jane, daughter of Sir Thomas Burdett, Bart., of Foremark, besides other issue, Gilbert, his heir, who left an only daughter and heiress. This lady devised the priory and other estates to Sir Robert Burdett, in whose family they still remain.

The Priory manor included only a portion of Repton. The remainder, forming the lay manor of Repton, was retained by the Earl of Chester. Subsequently it passed into other hands. John de Findern, in the reign of Henry IV., died, seized of an estate, called the Manor of Repingdon (Repton.) The heiress of the Finderns, about 1558, married Sir Richard Harpur, judge of the Common Pleas. The tithes of this manor, which had previously belonged to the priory, were appropriated to the Finderns, with the obligation of finding a curate; and the patronage of the church has since passed, with the manor, to the successive Harpur and Crewe baronets.

The church of St. Wystan is a handsome edifice, consisting of chancel, nave, north and south aisles, south porch (with a parvise or upper chamber), and western tower, surmounted by an exceedingly elegant spire. This is said, by tradition, to be the third church that has stood on the same spot; and the various styles of architecture—Saxon, Norman, Early English, Decorated, and Perpendicular—displayed in various parts of the structure, seem to corroborate the tradition. The present church is chiefly 14th century work, at which time it appears to have been rebuilt and enlarged. The most interesting feature about the edifice is the crypt beneath the chancel. This is a chamber nearly 17 feet square, with a vaulted roof of stone supported by four pillars, and eight responds against the wall, about 5ft. 6in. high. The responds are fluted, but the pillars are ornamented with a curious spiral band and moulding, and like the responds have square capitals. Two winding passages, with irregular stone steps, communicate with the church above; and in the centre of the western wall is a triangular arched opening, eighteen inches high, but its purpose is only conjectural. Modern square-headed windows have been inserted on the south and east sides, and a doorway on the north. Various have been the conjectures as to the antiquity and use of this curious chamber. Some writers assert that it was part of the old Saxon abbey, founded in the 7th century. It is, however, very doubtful whether the Saxons of the 7th century had so far advanced in the art of ornamental architecture as this crypt displays; and a comparison with the crypts at Hexham and Ripon, both known to have been erected in the 7th century, strengthens the doubt. These are considerably smaller; have a plain arched roof of semicircular form, without supporting columns; and are destitute of ornament. There can, however, be little doubt that it is Saxon work, part of the original Parish Church, erected in the 10th century.

The existence of this crypt had long been forgotten, till accidentally discovered in 1779. A grave was being dug in the chancel for Dr. Prior, the deceased head master of Repton School, when the gravedigger suddenly fell through the floor into the crypt below!

The church underwent a so-called "restoration" in 1792, when many monuments were destroyed, and all the remains of the old stained-glass smashed and carried away. Only one fragment remains in a window of the north aisle. The richly-carved oak pews and other carved oak work were swept away, and the tower arch filled up with brick and a singing gallery erected. The fabric was thoroughly restored in 1886, at a cost of £4,500, raised by subscriptions. The designs were supplied by Sir Arthur Bloomfield, A.R.A. The walls of the chancel were stripped of their wainscoting of painted wood, and the piscina and aumbry niches in the south wall opened out. The floor was lowered to its original level, and the roofs of the nave and south aisles carefully restored. The tower arch was opened out and the galleries removed; the deal horse-box pews introduced in 1792 have been replaced by open oak seats, and the choir chancel fitted with handsome carved oak stalls. The whitewash has been scraped off the walls, and the stone again laid bare. During the progress of the work the old spiral staircase leading to the parvise over the porch was discovered, as was also the entrance above the chancel arch, leading to the rood screen. The chancel floor has been laid with encaustic tiles, and a new pulpit placed on the north side of the choir, in memory of the late vicar, the Rev. W. Williams. The brass eagle lectern is a beautiful piece of work, presented by Mrs. Bell, in memory of her husband, who died in 1887; and the clock in the tower was erected by subscription, in 1868, as memorial of Catherine Temple Pears, wife of the head master of Repton School.

There are a few interesting old monuments. In the crypt is the recumbent effigy of a knight in plate armour, believed to represent Sir Robert Francis, the first of the family that settled at Foremark. Its original position was on an altar tomb in the north aisle. On the south wall of the south aisle is a slab, with the incised figures of a man and woman with two children at the foot. Round the margin is inscribed, "Here lieth buried the body of Gilbert Thacker, the sone of Thomas Thacker, Esqyer, who died the three and twentieth daye of Februarie, Anno dni 1563, Anno regni Elizabeth regine quinto." On the south wall of the organ chamber is a quaint monument with two kneeling figures facing each other, and below, under a canopy, is another figure. The inscription reads: "In this middle alley lieth Geo. Waklin, of Bretby, gent., and Ellen, his wife, who had issue one son. Wch. Ellen died the 23rd of March, 1614, and the said George the 22nd of Sept., 1617." There are several modern monuments to eminent masters of Repton School, and others.

There are six bells in the tower. A local couplet thus compares these bells with those of neighbouring churches:—

"Barow's big boulders, Repton's merry bells, Foremark's cracked pancheons, and Newton's eggshells."

The living is a vicarage, worth £150 nett, in the gift of Sir V. H. Crewe, Bart., and held by the Rev. George Woodyatt, B.A., Camb. The registers date from 1580.

The Grammar School.—Though interesting from its association with "Old legends of the monkish page,

Traditions of the saint and sage,
Tales that have the rime of age,
And chronicles of eld,"

it is as an educational centre that Repton is more widely known. The founder of the school was Sir John Port, Knight of the Bath, who, having lost his two sons at an early age, determined to bestow some portion of his estates in charitable foundations for the repose of his soul, and so, in 1556, he devised by will to his executors, Sir Thomas Gifford, Richard Harpur, and others, certain estates in the counties of Derby and Lancaster for the foundation and maintenance of a hospital at Etwall, and a grammar school at Etwall or Repton. He nominated Sir William Perryn, B.D., his late chaplain, the first master, and ordained that the scholars "every morning at their coming into school, and also at the afternoon, at an upon the departing from the school, do pray for my parents' souls, my soul, the soul of Elizabeth Port, my late wife, the souls of Walter and Thomas, my children, &c." The master's salary was twenty pounds per annum, and the usher's ten pounds. Sir John died the following year, and lies buried in Etwall Church.

Sir John had no property at the time of his death in Repton, but as the refectory of the dissolved priory was well adapted for the purposes of a school, his executors were induced to select that place for the foundation in preference to Etwall. The premises, styled in the indenture one large, great, and big house, near the kitchen, commonly called the "Feringre," were purchased from Gilbert Thacker for the sum of £37 10s.

Sir John's will makes no mention of "poor scholars," but "six of the poorest of Etwall parish" were to have "for ever twenty pence a-piece over and besides the lodgings" provided for them in the almshouses. In 1621 the estate had increased in value, and James I. granted a charter of incorporation by the style and title of "The master of Etwall Hospital, the schoolmaster, ushers, poor men and poor scholars." This charter ordained that there should be "one school master, two ushers, twelve poor men, and four scholars."

The school appears to have been famous almost from the time of its foundation. In a chancery suit, in 1676, concerning the right of boys to play in the schoolyard, their only playground, several witnesses gave evidence that there were amongst the scholars the sons of divers knights and gentlemen, to the number of about 200. The "poor scholars," at first four, were afterwards increased to eight, and in 1819 there were thirty-nine; but the name "poor scholar" was then a misnomer, for they were chiefly the sons of gentlemen from all parts of England, and none came from either Etwall or Repton.

The appointment of the Rev. Stewart Adolphus Pears as head master, in 1854, marks a new era in the school. There were only 48 boys when he took charge; when he resigned, in 1874, the number had increased to 257, and the school had risen to the highest rank as an educational establishment. All the premises have been restored or rebuilt, and considerable additions made. In 1857 the tercentenary of the school was celebrated with great rejoicing by a goodly gathering of old Reptonians, and, before separating, it was decided to commemorate the event by the erection of a memorial chapel, which was carried into effect the following year. The chapel has since been enlarged by an addition to the west end, and three stained glass windows placed in the chancel, in memory of Dr. Huckin, late headmaster. There are several other memorial windows.

The charity was reorganised by a scheme of the Endowed Schools Commission in 1873, which placed the management in a governing body consisting of the hereditary governors, ex-officio governor (the Lord-Lieutenant of the county), five nominated governors, and seven co-optative governors, to be gradually reduced to three. There are eight foundation scholarships, of the annual value of £40, and tenable for four years. There is a local scholarship of the value of £20 as long as the holder remains in the school, and open only to boys whose parents or guardians have been residing not less than three years in the parish of Repton or of Etwall. Four or more entrance exhibitions, varying in value from £20 to £60, and tenable so long as the holder remains at the school, are awarded annually. There are a Classical side and a Modern side. The latter is intended for boys preparing for the public services or commercial life. Technical instruction is also given, and for this purpose there are elaborately fitted up carpenters' and engineers' workshops. There are about 300 boys in the school. The teaching staff consists of the head master, Rev. W. M. Furneaux, M.A., and 22 assistant masters.

There are two Nonconformist chapels in the village, one belonging to the Wesleyans, erected in 1815; the other belonging to the Congregationalists, built in 1836, and subsequently enlarged. Repton had formerly its market, and the old weather-beaten cross remains. A statute hirings is still held on the Tuesday preceding October 11.

Gas works were erected in 1855, by a company of shareholders with a nominal capital of £2,000. The village is lighted by ten public lamps, the expense being defrayed by private subscription.

Milton is a hamlet and small village containing 1,330 acres of land, lying about one mile S.E. of Repton. Here is a Mission Room, in which Church service is held.

CHARITIES.—Thomas Whitehead, in 1654, devised a meadow called Ferry Acres, near the Trent, for the use of the head master of Repton School, on the condition of paying 30s. yearly to the poor. Richard Hough, by will dated 1657, gave £100 to the poor, which was invested in land at Osliston, producing £5 per annum. William Gilbert, in 1706, gave 2a. 8p. of land upon trust, the rents thereof to be distributed amongst not more than 12 nor fewer than 10 poor persons attending church on Christmas Day and Easter Sunday. William Hunt, clerk, by will in 1736, bequeathed to the vicar and churchwardens the sum of £20, the interest thereof to be distributed amongst eight of the poorest parishioners on Christmas Day. Richard Comings, by deed of settlement dated 1799, gave £100 in the three per cent. consols, the dividends thereof to be distributed amongst the poor by the vicar and churchwardens in bread on Christmas Eve. Rev. William Williams, late vicar of Repton, left in 1883 the sum of £382 6s. 9d., the interest thereof to be devoted to the repairs of the church; and there are 3a. 2r. 10p. of land, the rent of which, £9 11s., is applied to the same purpose. Mary and Dorothy Burdett's charities (see Foremark).

ROSLISTON.

Rosliston, formerly a chapelry under Walton, was, by an Order of the Queen in Council, constituted an independent parish about twenty years ago. It consists of the township of its own name, containing 1,187 acres, and is valued for rating purposes at £2,095. The inhabitants, who number 448, are chiefly employed in agriculture. The soil is marl and gravel resting on clay, and more than half of it is arable. Wheat and barley are chiefly grown. Rosliston is in the hundred of Repton and Gresley, petty sessional division of Swadlincote law union and county court district of Burton-on-Trent, and rural district deanery of Repton. Sir Robert Gresley, Bart. (Drakelow Hall), and Lieut Charles Milligan (Caldwell Hall), are the chief landowners and joint lords of the manor. Sidney Evershed, Esq., M.P., Stapenhill, Burton-on-Trent, has an estate here, and the vicar has 56 acres of glebe.

The village of Rosliston (Redlavestun in Domesday Book) stands about 2 miles S. of Burton-on-Trent, and is $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles distant from the railway station at Walton and Church Gresley. Rosliston had its chapel at an early period. Though not specifically named, this chapel is undoubtedly the one referred to in the Taxation Rolls of 1291, under Walton cum Capella. It consists of a apsidal chancel, nave, south porch, and western tower with octagonal spire. The upper portion of the spire was restored in 1802. In 1818 a brief was obtained for rebuilding the church. Happily the scheme did not include the tower and spire, which belong to the first half of the 14th century. There are three graves cast in the last quarter of the 18th century. In the churchyard is the base and socket of an ancient cross. The earliest register begins in 1596.

The living is a vicarage, net yearly value £135, with residence, in the gift of the trustees of Mr. D. H. Sutton and the Rev. J. L. Sutton, and held by the Rev. John Vallancey, M.A. Tithe rent-charge £81 10s.

The school, built in 1849, is attended by about 100 children. The Wesleyan Methodists have had a chapel here since 1873. In 1803 a workhouse, or house of industry, was called in the inscription on the front of the building, "House of Industry." It was erected here for the parishes and townships of Rosliston, Stretton-in-the-Fields, Cauldwell, Linton, Coton-in-the-Elms, and Croxall. After the passing of the Poor Law Bill and the formation of unions in 1834, this workhouse was disused and converted into tenements.

Post and Money Order Office, Rosliston; William Trimmings, postmaster. Letters are sent at 8-25 a.m., and are despatched at 5-5 p.m. by foot messenger from Burton-on-Trent, to the town. Nearest Telegraph Office, Gresley Station, about three miles.

SHARDLOW.

Shardlow and Great Wilne form a joint parish and township, containing 1,155½ acres of land lying on the south bank of the river Derwent, in the hundred of Morleston and Litchurch, petty sessional division and county court district of Derby, union and rural district of Shardlow, and deanery of Melbourne. For rating purposes it is valued at £4,207, and in 1891 had a population of (incl the inmates of the workhouse) 842. The land is divided among several proprietors, the principal of whom are Edward Charles S. Holden, Esq., lord of the manor; Rev. Wm. Roby Burgin, Shardlow; Charles & Walter Soresby, Ockbrook and Derby; the Earl of Harrington, Elvaston Castle; Edward Sutton, Esq., Market Deeping, Lincolnshire; and the Rev. Alfred Sutton, Bridekirk, Cockermouth, Cumberland.

At the time of the Domesday Survey Shardlow was a berewick, or minor manor, within the royal manor of Weston-on-Trent, which was held under the King by the Earl of Chester. This nobleman was the Conqueror's nephew, and chief founder of the Abbey of St. Werburgh, Chester, to which he made extensive grants of land in Shardlow, Aston, Weston, and Great Wilne; and Edward I. granted the monks the right of free warren over this and their other manors. After the dissolution of monasteries the abbey lands were granted by Henry VIII. to the new Bishop of Chester, but Queen Elizabeth transferred this and the other Derbyshire manors to the Sacheverells; and James I., by another grant, conferred them on Lord William Paget. Charles Paget was attainted, and the property reverted to the Crown. It has been in the possession of the ancestors of the present owner for nearly two centuries.

The village of Shardlow is situated on the Derby and Loughborough road, seven miles S.E. from Derby, and about a quarter of a mile from the river Trent, which is here crossed by Cavendish Bridge. The Trent and Mersey canal passes through the village, and was, in its early days, before it came into the possession of the North Staffordshire Railway Co., a source of considerable prosperity to Shardlow. There are several wharves and warehouses, but many of them are now unoccupied. The Trent Brewery, the property of Z. Smith & Co., brewers, bottlers, and maltsters, gives constant employment to about 50 men; and about the same number of hands is employed by Mr. Henry Dickinson, fruit grower and florist.

Shardlow, formerly included in the parish of Weston-on-Trent, was, in 1839, constituted an ecclesiastical parish. The church, dedicated to St. James, is a fine stone edifice in the Gothic style, consisting of chancel, nave, and a western tower, containing six bells. The total cost of erection was about £6,000, which was raised by voluntary contributions. The east window, of three lights, is filled with stained glass, depicting various scenes in the Old Testament. At the west end is a gallery containing an organ, presented by the late James Sutton, Esq., of Shardlow Hall, in 1868. The chimes were added to the clock in the tower in 1887, in commemoration of Queen Victoria's jubilee, by the parishioners. The nave is fitted with pews. There is accommodation for 455, and there are 290 free sittings. The living is a rectory, worth £350, without residence, in the gift of Edward Sutton, Esq., and held by the Rev. J. Eaton, M.A., since 1850.

The Wesleyan Methodists have a small chapel in the village, erected in 1859.

The National School was built in 1838, on the site of an older one, at a cost of £900. An infants' classroom was added in 1893. There are three departments, attended by about 180 children.

SHARDLOW is the head of a POOR LAW UNION, comprising 47 parishes and townships, situated in the counties of Derby, Leicester, and Nottingham. It embraces an area of 68,577 acres, and had, in 1891, a population of 51,995. The Workhouse is a large building of brick, erected at a cost of about £6,000, to accommodate 148 inmates. The number of indoor paupers at present is 137. The following are the parishes and townships comprised in the Union:—In Derbyshire—Alvaston, Aston-on-Trent, Arleston and Sinfen, Barrow-on-Trent, Breadsall, Breaston, Chaddesden, Chellaston, Dale Abbey, Derby Hills, Draycott, Elvaston, Hopwell, Kirk Hallam, Little Eaton, Littleover, Long Eaton, Melbourne, Normanton, Ockbrook, Osmaston, Risley, Sandiacre, Sawley, Shardlow, Sinfen Moor, Spondon, Stanley, Stanton-by-Bridge, Stanton-by-Dale, Swarkestone, West Hallam, Weston. In Leicestershire—Breedon-on-the-Hill, Castle Donington, Diseworth, Hemington, Isley Walton, Kegworth, Langley Priory, Lockington. In Nottinghamshire—Bramcote, Chilwell, Kingston-on-Soar cliff-on-Soar, Stapleford, Toton.

Great Wilne, a village and hamlet half-a-mile N.E. from Shardlow, com three farms and a few cottages. The New Connexion Methodists have a here, built in 1816, and enlarged in 1876 by the addition of a Sunday school

SINFIN MOOR.

Sinfín Moor is an extra parochial liberty, three miles S. by E. from Derby, containing 800 acres of land, the ratable value of which is £1,078. The population in 1891 was 38. The principal landowners are Sir V. H. Crewe, Bart., Sir R. R. Wilmot, Edward Sutton, Messrs. Roumieu (of London), and Richd. Sales, Esq., Barrow-on-Trent. The moor was enclosed in 1804, when awards were made to the townships that had rights of stray upon it. An Act was obtained in 1828 for draining the moor, and about 12 miles of drains have been laid. The soil is part clay, loam, and black peat, but the district is flat and uninviting. Derby races were formerly held here.

Sinfín Moor is in the hundred of Morleston and Litchurch, electoral division of Melbourne, petty sessional division and county court district of Derby, and poor law union of Shardlow.

SMISBY,

Or SMITHSBY, is a parish and village on the border of Leicestershire, containing 1,268 acres, in the hundred of Repton and Gresley, petty sessional division of Swadlincote, union and county court district of Ashby-de-la-Zouch, rural district of Hartshorne and Measham, and deanery of Repton. It is valued for rating purposes at £2,031, and had in 1891 a population of 306. The soil is chiefly sand and clay; and oats, wheat, barley, turnips, mangolds, and potatoes are the general crops. Sir Vauncey Harpur Crewe, Bart., who is lord of the manor, and Lord Donington, are the principal landowners. There are several small freeholders.

The manor of Smithsby at the the time of the Domesday Survey belonged to Nigel de Stafford, but shortly afterwards it passed to the family of Comyn. A little later it became the property of an heiress, Joan (1800, married William Shepey. Edmund Shepey, without issue, left the manor to his sister Margaret, and it remained with this family till 1660, when it was present owner.

The Hall or Manor House, the residence of the estate, is a large stone mansion adjoining the churchyard, and it is said, but doubtfully, to have been built by Sir J. 1500. It is now, and has been for the past thirty years, by Mr. William Sale.

The village of Smisby is well built and pleasantly situated. The church, dedicated to St. James, consisting of nave, chancel, south aisle, porch, and a west tower with 17th-century bells. It was originally a chapel of the Repton Priory in 1271. The aisle is separated from the nave by pointed arches. The flat roof of the nave is supported by oak, and the chancel is panelled with oak that was brought from the three-light east window is in the Decorated style of the Perpendicular period. Only one or two ancient monuments remain. An alabaster slab in the west wall of the aisle is sculptured in slight relief. Her hands are clasped on a base on two small dogs. The inscription is in Norman-French of the name Johan, a portion of the date, and a few words. The north wall of the chancel is the monument of Henry his wife, dated 1627. It was the eldest son of this generation. The living is a vicarage, worth £55 yearly, in the gift of the Rev. R. Leitch, M.A., vicar of Blackfordby.

The Wesleyans have a small chapel in the village. The National School, built the same year, is the property of the trustees.

At the east end of the village is an excellent spring, called Well; and near it is a field supposed to have been the site of the battle described by Sir Walter Scott in his "Ivanhoe."

The following hamlets are in this parish:—Ann consisting of twelve cottages and an inn; the Fifty, three cottages; the Forty or Faulty, containing six cottages, half-a-mile distant about one mile N. by E. from the village.

Letters from Ashby-de-la-Zouch, which is also the nearest Market town (1½ miles). Wall Box in village cleared of stones.

SPONDON.

This is a large and important parish and village, in the hundred of Appletree, petty sessional division and county court district of Derby, union and rural district of Shardlow, and deanery of Ilkeston. Its total extent is 3,247 acres, ratable value £17,226, and the population in 1891 was 2,208, an increase of 451 during the preceding decade. W. D. N. Drury-Lowe, Esq., Sir H. Wilmot, Bart., W. T. E. Cox, Esq., J. E. Russell, Esq., the Misses Meakin, Mr. W. Meakin, and Benton's trustees are the principal landowners, and the first named gentleman is lord of the manor.

The earliest mention of Spondon occurs in the Domesday Book, from which it appears that the manor was held at the time of the Survey by Henry de Ferrers, and it had then a church and a priest. William de Ferrers, in the reign of Henry II., gave the church to the leper hospital of Burton Lazars, in Leicestershire; and others of the family made grants of land in Spondon to the same institution. These lands were situated at Borrowash and Locko. The name of the latter place suggests the presence of a Lock Hospital or Lazar House for the reception of the lepers of the district. It is mentioned as early as 1296, and was a cell or preceptory subordinate to the mother house.

The numerous manors held by the Ferrers were forfeited by rebellion in the reign of Henry III., and were granted to Edmund, Earl of Lancaster, by the King, who also confirmed to the brethren of the hospital the lands which had been given to them. In 1563, this estate with that of Borrowash, was granted to Sir Thomas Stanhope. Subsequently it belonged to John Gilbert Cooper, Esq., who, in 1747, sold it to John Lowe, Esq., for £13,000.

Locko Park, the seat of W. D. N. Drury-Lowe, Esq., is a handsome modern mansion situated in a well-wooded park of 350 acres. The manor of Nether Locko belonged to the family of Byrd in the reign of Henry IV., and they retained possession of it till the reign of Elizabeth, when it was sold to William Gilbert, of Barrow. From this family it descended to John Gilbert Cooper, Esq., and was included in John Lowe's purchase above mentioned. Richard Lowe, the last heir male, who died in 1785, bequeathed his estates to his kinsman, William Drury, Esq., who assumed, in consequence, the additional name and arms of Lowe. Mary Anne, the only child and heiress of William Drury Lowe, married Robert Holden, Esq., of Darley Abbey; and William Drury Holden, their eldest son, succeeding to the estates in 1849, took the name of Lowe. He married the Hon. Caroline Esther, daughter of Nathaniel, second Lord Scarsdale, and died in 1877. The park grounds are picturesquely diversified, and stocked with deer. Adjoining the house is a domestic chapel built by Henry Gilbert in 1673.

The village of Spondon is situated on an eminence overlooking the picturesque vale of the Derwent, three miles E. from Derby, and half-a-mile from the station of its own name on the Derby and Nottingham branch of the Midland railway.

The church is a handsome edifice, consisting of chancel, nave, north and south aisles, north porch, and west tower surmounted by a spire rising to a height of 114 feet. The dedication is a subject of some dispute. In the editions of the "Liber Regis" edited by Bacon and Ecton respectively, it is styled St. Mary, and by this name it was generally known until very recent years. Dr. Cox, in his "Churches of Derbyshire," contends that the original dedication was to St. Werburgh, and in proof of the assertion quotes from the will of Thomas Byrde, of Locko, dated 1524, wherein he left his body to be buried "in the chancel of the church of Saynt Warburge of Spondon." The present church dates from the 14th century. The edifice which previously occupied the site was entirely destroyed by an accidental fire that broke out "on the evening of Thursday before the Sunday next after Palm Sunday, in the year 1340." The fire spread to the town, and only four tenements escaped the conflagration. When the church was rebuilt the Decorated style was at the height of its perfection; but the restoration which took place in 1826, with the deplorable absence of taste that then prevailed, robbed it of much of its architectural beauty. Dr. Cox thus epitomise mischief then done:—"The north wall of the aisle was rebuilt, and the windows inserted; the two old porches removed, and a new square one built on the north side; the nave piers and arcade hacked over to get purchase for plaster and cement; the chancel arch removed, and a lower one of wood inserted; the rood screen and a large quantity of old oak cleared away; the tower blocked up by a heavy gallery; the old roofs throughout the church destroyed and low flat plaster ceilings substituted." A thorough restoration was commenced in 1890, and completed in 1892, at a cost of £5,681. The architectural and other incongruities perpetrated by the restorers of 1826 have, in most cases, been removed, and the church is now structurally much the same as it was in the 14th century. The chancel arch has been rebuilt in harmony with the general style of the edifice, and the floor laid with highly-polished Derby marble. The expense incurred in the restoration of the chancel was defrayed by the Misses Meakin, and the five-light east window is now being filled with stained glass by the same generous ladies. All the old features have been religiously preserved. In the south wall is a triple sedilia, with plain square canopies, beyond it a small piscina niche. The priest's door also remains, and on the same side, low down in the wall, is a small narrow window, supposed to have been so placed for the benefit of the lepers, who were not permitted to enter the church. On the opposite wall is a projecting stone book-rest, which doubtless had some use in the services of the church; and beneath it is an alms-house window with a trefoiled head. On the same side, between the two windows, is an arched recess for the purpose of which is not known with certainty.

The aisles, separated from the nave by arcades of three large pointed arches, had each an altar at the east end, as shown by the piscina niches which remain. Against the east wall of the north aisle is now placed a curious monument, bearing the bust of a lady and the following inscription:—"M. Elizabethæ Gilbert cujus anime pietatem et virtutem non valet ars huius depingere aut imitari nihil de ea nunc restat nisi memoria laude digna et in spem B. Resurrectionis se ulterius quaeras lector ecce sub pedibus sanctus in spem B. Resurrectionis se ulterius quaeras lector ecce sub pedibus" which in English runs thus:—"In memory of Elizabeth Gilbert, the piety and virtue of whose mind the art of man is unable to depict or imitate. Nothing remains except her memory, worthy of praise, purified and holy, in hope of the Blessed Resurrection. Reader, if you ask more, look under your feet." An intimation to the reader to look beneath his feet for further information relative to the stone that covered the grave, now removed and placed against the wall near the monument. It bears a long Latin inscription which is now quite illegible. On a brass plate in this aisle is a long inscription reciting the bequest of £100 to the poor of Spondon by William Gilbert, Esq., of Dublin. He was the youngest son of Thomas Gilbert, of Locko, and sought his fortune in Dublin, where he obtained a Government appointment. On a brass plate in the south aisle it is recorded that the said aisle was restored in memory of Elizabeth Janet Fawkes, formerly the late vicar, by her relations and friends. The pulpit also, a very fine piece of oak carving, is a memorial of the same lady, presented by her husband. The box pews were removed in 1885, and the church seated throughout with benches to accommodate 700. All the seats are free. The tower contains six bells. In the churchyard is the fragment of an ancient cross, ornamented with interlaced knot work, believed to be Saxon.*

The living is a vicarage worth £200 per annum, in the gift of W. I. Lowe, Esq., and held by the Rev. F. S. Paynter, B.A.

The Wesleyan Methodists have had a chapel in the village since the beginning of the present century. The present one was built in 1877, at a cost of £900. It is a neat structure with Sunday school attached, capable of seating 300 persons. The Primitive Methodist chapel, built in 1895, at a cost of £1,000, will seat 100.

* We beg to acknowledge our indebtedness to C. W. Cooke, Esq., for much of the information.

The earliest provision for educational purposes was made in 1657, by Thos. Gilbert, of Locko, who left £60 to be invested in land for the benefit of a schoolmaster; the endowment was further increased by Henry Gilbert, who, in 1711, gave a close of land for the same purpose; and Dean Stanhope, in 1727, charged his moiety of the rectory with the payment of £5 yearly for the education of poor children. The present National school was erected in 1839, at a cost of £700, and enlarged, in 1887, at an expense of over £900. There are two departments, mixed and infants', with a total accommodation for 500 children.

Borrowash, a large village one mile from Spondon. A small portion of it is within this parish.

CHARITIES.—William Gilbert, as before mentioned, left by will, in 1649, the sum of £1,000, which was invested in land now producing £145 15s. per annum, besides which there is a sum of money invested in consols yielding £12s. 6s. 4d. yearly as interest, total income £158 1s. 4d. During the past year there was available for distribution a balance of £149 7s., which was given to the poor in weekly payments of 1s. and 2s. John Locko, in 1663, devised a close of land, now let at a yearly rental of £18, which is distributed amongst 36 poor persons in sums of 5s. each at Easter and Christmas. Griffith Dakin, in 1723, devised a rent-charge of 12s. yearly out of his close called Dockey Furrows, on trust, to purchase one dark grey gown for a widow woman of Spondon, the same person not to receive this charity oftener than once in three years. He also devised a rent-charge of 12s. out of another close towards supporting the minister officiating for the congregation of Protestant Dissenters assembling at Alvaston, called Presbyterians; should, however, such meeting be discontinued, the said rent-charge was to be applied in purchasing one dark grey coat for a man, as above. The Presbyterian chapel at Alvaston was discontinued many years ago, and the whole amount is applied in purchasing the materials for and making four gowns for as many old women. Elizabeth Cowper, in 1728, left certain lands for the benefit of the poor. The rent, amounting to £22 per annum, is distributed amongst the poor in coats twice a year. Miss Cade bequeathed £100 to the use of the poor. This sum is invested with the Charity Commissioners, and the interest, £2 17s. 8d., is divided amongst eight spinsters or widows. Gisborne's Bequest—The sum of £6 12s. 11d. is received from this charity and distributed amongst the poor in flannel.

Almshouses.—Four almshouses for four aged women were erected in 1873 by the late Mrs. Barrow, who endowed them with £39 5s. yearly for the payment to each inmate of 3s. 6d. weekly.

STANTON-BY-BRIDGE.

This is a small parish, lying on the south bank of the Trent, adjo Melbourne, and takes the addendum of its name from the historic bridge w here crosses the river. The total extent of the parish, including water surfa 1,273 acres; under assessment, 1,160 acres; ratable value, £2,040; and population in 1891 was 116. The parish is in the hundred of Repton

Gresley, county council division and deanery of Melbourne, petty sessional division of Repton, county court district of Derby, and union and rural district of Shardlow. The principal landowners are Sir Francis Burdett, Bart., and Sir V. H. Crewe, Bart., joint lords of the manor, and the Rev. Charles Henry Carlisle, in right of the glebe (180 acres).

At the time of the Domesday Survey, Stanton was a royal manor, held by Ernui, and subsequently, for several generations, its owners were styled De Stanton. From this family it passed by marriage to John Francis, of Tickenall, in the reign of Edward III. Subsequently the manor appears to have been held in moieties by the Fraunceys and the Findernes. The former family terminated in an heiress, who married Sir Thomas Burdett, Bart., and the heiress of the latter conveyed her moiety by marriage to Sir Richard Harpur, justice of the Common Pleas, in the reign of Elizabeth, and it is still in the possession of his descendant, Sir Vauncey Harpur Crewe, Bart. The abbot of Burton held some land here, which was alienated at the dissolution of the abbey.

The village is seated on an eminence overlooking the Trent, $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles S.S.E. from Derby, and received its name from the abundance of stone in the neighbourhood. The church, which bears the dedication of St. Michael, is a small, ancient edifice, picturesquely covered with ivy, and consists of chancel, nave, north aisle, south porch, and a bell turret on the west gable, containing three bells. The chancel arch, semi-circular, and very plain, and the round-headed light in the west wall are, in the opinion of that eminent ecclesiologist, Dr. Cox, Saxon work.* The south doorway is Norman, with the characteristic chevron and billet mouldings. The aisle is divided from the nave by three pointed arches, and had formerly an altar, as shown by the piscina niche at the east end. On the exterior wall, above the east window, is a shield bearing the initials of Augustine Jackson, and the date 1682, and from Bassano's "Church Notes" we learn that the following inscription was "drawn with a pensell" on the south wall of the chancel:—"When thro fanaticall prophanesses ye part of ye house of God was inhabited by Oroles (owls) and spiders, it was thus rebuilt and beautified for ye use of Christians by Augustine Jackson, rector of ye church." The whole fabric was thoroughly restored and resealed in 1865, and the previous wooden bell turret superseded by one of stone. A handsome reredos of alabaster has been erected in memory of the Rev. Mr. Whitaker, a late rector. There are a few ancient monuments, but none of any special interest. The fragments of several incised sepulchral slabs may be seen built into the west wall of the aisle, and under an arched recess is the recumbent figure of an ecclesiastic, supposed to be Geoffrey de Stanton, who held the rectory in the early part of the 14th century, and rebuilt or restored the church. Against the south wall of the chancel is an alabaster slab, bearing the incised effigies of William Sacheverel, Esq., and Mary his wife, who died in 1558; and another incised slab, bearing the figures of a man and woman, with six boys and seven girls at their feet, commemorates Katharine, wife of Richard Francis, who died in 1530. The registers date from 1664. The living is a rectory, worth £362 a year, in the gift of Sir V. H. Crewe, Bart., and held by the Rev. Charles Henry Carlisle, A.K.C. Near the church once stood a large mansion, of which only the fireplace now remains.

On the southern border of the parish is an old farmhouse, substantially built, bearing the name of St. Bride, otherwise St. Bridget. In the walls are some sculptured stones of an ecclesiastical character; and stone coffins and human remains have been dug up in the garden. Nothing is known of its history; but, as the abbots of Burton had lands in the parish, it is probable that this was the monastic grange and chapel.

STAPENHILL.

This parish, comprising 1,327 acres of land lying on the east bank of Trent, was included in the borough of Burton-on-Trent in 1889, under power of the Borough Extension Act. The ratable value is £16,684, and the population in 1891, was 4,703. The Marquis of Anglesey, who is lord of the manor, Earl of Carnarvon, the Exors. of Joseph S. Clay, John Stretton, Esq., and Rev. E. Warbrick, in right of the glebe, are the principal landowners. Stapenhill is in the hundred of Morleston and Litchurch, union and county court district of Burton-on-Trent, petty sessional division of Swadlincote, and deanery of Beibourton. For the purpose of carrying into effect the provisions of the Local Government Act of 1894, the south-western portion of the parish has been united with the adjoining parish of Drakelow, the north-eastern part has been united with Bretby, and both are in the Repton rural district. The rest forms the parish of Stapenhill.

The manor of Stapenhill, at the time of the Domesday Survey, belonged to unequal portions to the Abbot of Burton and Nigel de Stafford. After the dissolution of Burton Abbey, this manor, together with the impropriate tithes, was granted by Henry VIII. to Sir William Paget, and it still belongs to his descendant, the Marquis of Anglesea.

The village, which stands on the bank of the Trent, opposite Burton, consists of a number of good streets and many villa residences occupied by the trade of Burton. Formerly, the only means of crossing the river here was by a ferry; in 1889, an iron girder foot-bridge of great length and strength was erected by the first Lord Burton and presented to the Corporation of that town. The church of St. Peter, founded before the Conquest, was given by the second abbot of Burton, to that monastery early in the 11th century. In the great tithes were appropriated to the abbey and a vicarage ordained, the patronage of the abbots. There were chapels at Drakelow, Heathcoat, and Newhall, which the vicar was to serve either personally or by his chaplain. These chapels disappeared soon after the Reformation. In 1780 the inhabitants obtained a Brief for taking down their very ancient and dilapidated church and rebuilding it at an estimated cost of £1,133. It was rebuilt, with the exception of the chancel, in 1838, at the expense of the vicar, and in 1861 it was enlarged by an addition to the east end. It was taken entirely down and the present church erected on the site in 1881, at a cost of £13,500, raised by public subscription. The architecture is that of the latter half of the 14th century, the Decorated style was merging into the Perpendicular. The plan comprises a spacious nave, transepts and tower. There is no structural division to mark the chancel. The church is seated throughout with open benches of pine to accommodate 850, and 425 sittings are free. There are a few memorials, the oldest of which is the slab of an altar tomb bearing the effigies of a man in armour and his wife, with their children. According to the Latin inscription round the margin it records the death of William Dethicke, in 1497. The registers date from 1680. The living is a vicarage worth £350, with residence in the gift of the Marquis of Anglesea, and held, since 1875, by the Rev. Ed-

Warbreck, B.A. In connection with the church are mission rooms at Stanton and the Freehold. A commodious Sunday school was erected, in 1891, at a cost of £2,000, raised by public subscription.

The Primitive and Free Church Methodists have small chapels here, and there is an unsectarian mission room.

The educational interests are under the control of the Burton-on-Trent United District School Board, who have three commodious schools in the parish. There is also an Institute, erected in 1887, containing library, reading and recreation rooms, and a hall capable of seating 300. The total cost was about £1,700.

Beautiful pleasure grounds, about five acres in extent, stretching along the bank of the Trent, were opened about 25 years ago, and "are maintained at the public cost for the enjoyment of the public." The Burton-on-Trent cemetery is situated in this parish. It contains 22 acres of land very tastefully laid out, and has two mortuary chapels. It was opened in 1866.

Brizlincote (anciently Brisingcoate) is an estate in this parish comprising nearly 300 acres, belonging to the Earl of Carnarvon. The Hall, now occupied by Mr. John Startin, who farms the land, is an ancient mansion, seated on an eminence from which there is an extensive view over the surrounding country. It is a massive structure of brick with walls a yard thick, and was formerly enclosed by a wall nine feet high. There are indications of a moat. Over the front door is inscribed "Non ignara mali miseri succurrere disco A.D. 1714," and over the back door "Homo Homini Lupus," with the same date, and the monogram of Philip, Earl of Chesterfield, by whom the hall is supposed to have been renovated.

CALDWELL or CAULDWELL is a township and chapelry in the parish of Stapenhill, containing 1,028 acres of land, and 149 inhabitants. The gross rental is £2,788, and the ratable value £2,369. The soil is a variable mixture of clay, gravel, and sand, on which wheat, oats, barley, and roots are chiefly grown. The land belongs to several proprietors, of whom the following are the most extensive:—Lieut.-Colonel Milligan, J.P., Caldwell Hall; Richard Ratcliff, Esq., Stamford Hills, Loughborough; Exors. of the late Mr. John Hopkins; Sir Robert Gresley, Bart., Drakelow Hall; Thomas Wilson Pratt, Esq., Whittington, Lichfield; and the Etwall and Repton Corporation. The tithe, gross amount £129, belongs to the vicar of Stapenhill.

The manor of Caldewelle was given by the Norman Conqueror to Burton Abbey, and it remained in the possession of that house until the dissolution of monasteries. In 1545, Henry VIII. granted the manor and impropriate tithes of Caldwell to Sir William Paget, and ten years later it was sold by Henry Lord Paget to Peter Collingwood. On the death of the latter gentleman, his niece, the wife of Thomas Saunders, of Little Ireton, inherited the estate, and it subsequently passed by marriage to the Mortimers. Hans Winthorpe Mortimer sold it to Henry Evans, Esq., of Burton-on-Trent; in 1858 the manor and estate were purchased from the late Miss Evans by Sir Henry Des Voeux, from whom they descended in 1875, to his nephew, Lieut.-Colonel Charles Milligan, J.P., the present owner.

Caldwell Hall, the seat of Colonel Milligan, is a large mansion of brick, pleasantly situated amidst surroundings of woodland scenery. In the grounds is an ornamental lake covering several acres, and well stocked with carp—the descendants of those preserved by the Abbots of Burton, who had a grange here.

The village is small but pleasantly seated on rising ground, four miles S. by E. from Burton-on-Trent, and about two miles from Gresley station, on the Burton and Leicester branch of the Midland railway. The higher grounds command extensive prospects of the Trent valley and Dovedale. The village is said to have received its name from the cold springs which abound in the neighbourhood. The chapel-of-ease, which is dedicated to St. Giles, is a substantial stone edifice, consisting of chancel and nave, with small turret, containing two bells. It is a building of considerable antiquity, but recent restorations have obliterated most of its ancient features. Two very small circular-headed lights, of workmanship, remain in the nave, and one in the chancel, which Dr considers as "undoubtedly pre-Norman work."* A circular arch formerly divided the nave and chancel. The east and west windows are filled with stained glass. On the chancel floor are three 17th century alabaster slabs, to members of the Sanders family; and on the north wall of the nave is a brass to Sir Thomas Gresley, Bart., M.P. The chapel was completely renovated in 1843, and more carefully restored in 1865. The Baptists have a small chapel in the village. The children attend the school at Rosliston.

STRETTON-EN-LE-FIELD.

Stretton-en-le-Field is a parish and township situated in the detached portion of the county, containing 1,277 acres of land, belonging solely to Sir Mylles Cave-Browne-Cave, Bart., who is also lord of the manor. The total ratable value is £1,314, and the number of inhabitants in 1891 was 67. It is in the hundred of Repton and Gresley, petty sessional division of Swadlincote, county court district and union of Ashby-de-la-Zouch, and deanery of Repton.

At the time of the Domesday Survey the manor of Streitun (Stretton-en-le-Field) was held by one Roger, under Henry de Ferrers. The next owners were the Strettons, who were probably the descendants of the above Roger. The male line terminated in John de Stretton, whose daughter and heiress married Adomar Taverner de Lichfield. Adomar was a man of considerable importance, and was sheriff of the counties of Leicester and Warwick in 1390 and 1399. He died the following year, leaving no issue, and his relict conveyed the manor to John Findern, of Findern. In 1465, the estate was purchased from this family by Walter, Lord Mountjoy; and about the middle of the 16th century it came into the possession of the Brownes, and with this family it still remains.

The village is small but delightfully situated in a well wooded district, five miles S.W. from Ashby-de-la-Zouch, and $1\frac{1}{2}$ miles from Donisthorpe station, on the Ashby and Nuneaton branch of the Midland railway. The church, dedicated to St. Michael, is an ancient edifice, embowered amongst trees, and consists of chancel, nave, north aisle, and tower, surmounted by a spire. There was a church here in the early part of the 13th century, but the oldest portions of the present edifice are in the Decorated style of the 14th century. The fabric was restored in the following century, when the walls were raised to receive the present flat oaken roof. In 1850 another restoration took place, with the lamentably bad taste that characterised the period. The present flat plaster roof was placed on the chancel, cutting off the top of the five-light east window. The aisle is separated from the nave by three low pointed arches, supported by square pillars. In a recess in the north wall is the founder's tomb. The upper part of the arch has been cut away to make room for a modern window, but what remains still bears some traces of the original beautiful carving. In the floor of the same aisle is a white marble slab, bearing the incised figure of a priest in eucharistic vestments. Round the margin is a Latin inscription, now almost illegible, showing that it covers the remains of Walter Savage, formerly rector of the church, who died in 1513. Some late rectors are commemorated on mural tablets in the chancel, and there are a few memorials of the Browne family at the west end of the aisle. The windows have been robbed of their tracery, and otherwise altered, and now no two of them are alike. Dr. Cox, writing in 1877, passes the following scathing rebuke on the state of the sacred edifice:—"For damp, dirt, and general air of melancholy neglect, we should hope this church is without a rival." The interior is still in the same dilapidated condition. The tower contains two bells, one dated 1628, the other is apparently older. The old spire was taken down and rebuilt in 1889. The living is a rectory, worth £240 per annum, with residence, in the gift of Sir Mylles Cave-Browne-Cave, and since 1886 by the Rev. E. Hallett Todd, M.A. The income is derived from tithe rent-charge (£176) and 50 acres of glebe.

The Hall, the seat of Sir Mylles Cave-Browne-Cave, Bart., is a large mansion situated in a well wooded park covering about 60 acres. The Browns were a family of considerable antiquity, and some of its members rose to official positions in the state. Sir John Browne, Lord Mayor of London, was father of Sir William Browne, who held the same office in 1508. John Browne Esq., son of the latter, was Lord Almoner to the King and Master of the Mint during the reigns of Henry VIII., Edward VI., Mary and Elizabeth. He was the first of the family that owned the Stretton estate; and Charles Browne, his son, rebuilt the manor house and resided here. William Browne, the last heir of the family, died in 1744, and his daughter and coheir married Edward Cave, of Eydon. John Cave, their second son, inheriting this estate from his maternal grandfather, took the name of Browne by Act of Parliament in 1751. William Cave-Browne, his son, afterwards inherited the Cave baronetcy, thereupon resumed the name of Cave, and the present baronet is his grandson. The Caves are of Norman extraction, and took their name from the lordship of Cave in Yorkshire, which had been given by the Conqueror to Jordayne, an ancestor.

CHARITIES.—John Bakewell, of Shenton, in the county of Leicester, gentleman, in the year 1700 gave to the poor of Stretton-en-le-Field an annual rent-charge of 30s., secured on the tithes of the vicarage of St. Thomas's Church, which is distributed by the occupier on St. Thomas's Day. Mary Ann Humfrey Cave-Browne, wife of the Rev. William Cave Humfrey, rector of Laughton, in Leicestershire, in 1856 gave to the rector and churchwardens for the time being of the parish of Stretton-en-le-Fields (her native place), the sum of £200 in trust to invest the same in Government securities, and distribute the dividends thereof in provisions, coal, or fuel amongst the poor of St. Thomas's Day.

Letters via Ashby-de-la-Zouch. Wall Box, near the Church, cleared at 5-25 p.m. on weekdays, and 10-30 a.m. on Sundays. Nearest Telegraph and Money Order Office, Donisthorpe (2½ miles distant).

SWADLINCOTE.

Swadlincote, formerly a township in Church Gresley, was constituted a distinct parish in 1846. It is in the hundred of Repton and Gresley, union of Burton-on-Trent, deanery of Repton, and is the head of the petty sessional division. The total area is about 600 acres, ratable value £11,000, and the population in 1891 was 2,945. The Granville Colliery Co., Ltd., Edmund Sharpe, Swadlincote; and Hall & Boardman, Ltd., are the principal landowners. Coal of good quality is found and wrought in the parish.

The village is large and stands four miles E.S.E. of Burton-on-Trent and about the same distance W.N.W. of Ashby-de-la-Zouch, with a station on the Swadlincote and Woodville branch of the Midland railway. The inhabitants are chiefly employed in the collieries, the potteries, and the brick and sanitary works. Swadlincote has long had a reputation for the manufacture of white and yellow ware, and in late years it has acquired fame for the production of ornamental pottery. At the works of the Palissy Pottery Company may be seen wares for decorative as well as useful purposes, rivalling in elegance of form and richness and beauty of glaze and colouring, the famed productions of the old potters. The village is lighted with gas from works established in 1859. A Market was erected by public subscription in 1861, and a market is held every Saturday night from 6 to 10 p.m. Petty sessions are held in the Town Hall. The Bank of England, Ltd., have a bank here, and will shortly erect new premises.

estimated cost of £3,000. A Local Board was formed in 1871, and in 1893 Gresley and Newhall were amalgamated with it.

The church of Emanuel was erected in 1845-6. It is a neat Gothic edifice of stone, comprising chancel, nave, transepts, and bell turret, containing one bell. There are 401 sittings, all free and unappropriated. The living is a vicarage, in the gift of the vicar of Gresley, worth £200 per annum, with residence, and held by the Rev. Edward Maxlow, B.A. There are 30 acres of glebe. Nonconformity is an important factor in the religious life of Swadlincote. The Wesleyans erected their first chapel in 1816, and enlarged it in 1823. It was further enlarged in 1837, and rebuilt in 1863, at a cost of £2,000. There is accommodation for 700 persons. Adjoining the chapel is a burial ground, now disused. A Sunday School was built in 1891, at a cost of £1,440. The Baptist Chapel was erected in 1876, at a cost of about £2,000. It is a substantial building capable of seating 520 people. The first chapel built in 1866 is now used as a Sunday School. The Primitive Methodists have two chapels here—one in Frederick Street, and the other in Coppice Side; the former was erected in 1889, and the latter was rebuilt in 1886. The members of the United Methodist Free Church have also a place of worship here.

The National School was erected in 1850, and is attended by 256 children. The Board School was built in 1881, at a cost of £4,000. There are departments for boys, girls, and infants, capable of accommodating 406 children. The education is free.

Midway is a hamlet partly in this parish and partly in Hartshorne. It was so named because it stands exactly midway between Burton-on-Trent and Ashby-de-la-Zouch.

SWARKESTONE.

Swarkestone is a parish and township on the north bank of the Trent, containing 916 acres of land, belonging to Sir V. H. Crewe, Bart., who is also lord of the manor. It is intersected by a branch of the Midland railway, and also by the Trent and Mersey canal, and the Derby canal, which here unites with the above-mentioned one. The ratable value of the parish is £2,059, and the population in 1891 was 232, including 12 boatmen on the canal. The soil is light and sandy, except on the high grounds, where there is some strong land. One half of the parish is in pasture. Swarkestone is in the hundred of Repton and Gresley, electoral division of Melbourne, poor law union of Shardlow, petty sessional division and county court district of Derby, and deanery of Melbourne.

The earliest notice of Swarkestone occurs in Domesday Book, circa 1087, at which time the manor was held by Henry de Ferrers. There was, however, a part of Swarkestone that pertained to the manor of Melbourne and belonged to the Crown. This latter was granted to Robert de Holand in 1307. Joanna, wife of John de Beck, died in 1322, seized of the manor of Swarkestone. The further descent for sometime is not known; but a family of the name of Cook were patrons of the rectory in the 14th century, and were probably also lords of the manor. The next owners were the Rollestones, from whom it passed to the Finderns. This family terminated in an heiress, who conveyed this and other estates in marriage to Richard Harpur, Esq., from whom they have descended to the present owner, Sir Vauncey Harpur Crewe, Bart., Calke Abbey. Sir Richard Harpur, a justice of the Common Pleas in the reign of Elizabeth, built himself a noble mansion of stone here, a considerable portion of which still remains. The family were staunch Royalists, and during the Civil Wars their hall was garrisoned for the King by Colonel Hastings, who also threw up some works at the bridge to secure the passage of the Trent. In January, 1643, a zealous officer in the Parliamentary army, led Sir George Gresle two pieces of artillery to Swarkestone. The Royalists at the b very determined resistance, but were at length overpowered by driven from their works with considerable loss. The garrison in t abandoned it and fled. Sir John Harpur remained uncompromising allegiance to the Crown, and as a penalty he had to compound for the handsome sum of £4,000, and £110 per annum for ever churches of Barrow, Tickenhall, and Repton. Those were rough o neither mercy nor justice was meted out to the losing side. The r remain, and show, by their extent and massiveness, that the ho considerable strength and importance. A little beyond the walls t ruins is another walled enclosure, supposed to have been a bowling side of which are the roofless walls of a large apartment, said to banquetting room.

The village stands on the north bank of the Trent, five miles Derby, and one mile from Chellaston station, on the Midland church, which is dedicated to St. James, consists of chancel, with nave, north aisle, and an embattled west tower, with pinacles. Harpur chapel only are ancient, the rest of the edifice was rebuilt expense of £1,000. There are three bells in the tower, the oldest 1688. Under the tower is an ancient font, and several carved during the recent rebuilding, and evidently portions of the early N have been rebuilt in the walls. There are three memorial window ancient monuments. The Rollestons were buried on the north chancel, but only one memorial remains of the ancient owners o It is a large altar tomb under an arched recess. On the upper s the effigies of a man and woman—the former in plate armour and close fitting dress with a long girdle, their feet resting on dogs. T tomb is divided into four compartments; in the two centre on relief seven sons and seven daughters, and in the outer ones angels. It is the monument of "John Rolston, Esquer, sutyne lord of Sw and . . . hys wyffe," &c.; the former died in 1482, and the The Harpur mortuary chapel, on the south side of the chancel interesting monuments of that family. The oldest is a raised tomb bearing the recumbent effigies of Chief Justice Harpur, and Ja wife. The other is to the memory of Sir John Harpur and his effigies of the knight and his lady have been very carefully carved is represented in plate armour, his head resting on his helmet, the and dress open down the front, displaying the beautiful embroidery. Sir John was the son of Chief Justice Harpur, and died in 1627. commence in 1630, but are defective in the earlier part. The livin valued in the King's Book at £5, now worth £227 net, in the Harpur Crewe, Bart., and held in conjunction with Stanton-by- are 110 acres of glebe.

The Trent is here crossed by a noble stone bridge, erected cost of £3,000. The river is spanned by five arches, and the brid as a raised causeway, supported on arches, over the low ground fo quarters of a mile, thus enabling the traveller to pass in safety w the Trent. The predecessor of this bridge, which was washed do 1795, was, according to legend, built by two maiden ladies nan who were owners of Swarkestone. They mortgaged their estate t to complete the work, but having obtained no charter for the bridge, the tolls they expected to receive were not paid, and could and they ended their days in poverty. It is further said that th in one grave in the church of Prestwold, Leicestershire. The b about the year 1250, and the lower parts of the piers still remain.

TICKNALL.

Ticknall, or Tickenhall parish comprises 2,727 acres of land, belonging chiefly to Sir Vauncey Harpur Crewe, Bart., of Calke Abbey, who is also lord of the manor; Sir F. Burdett, Bart., Foremark Hall; and the trustees of Hartshorne school. It is in the poor law union and county court district of Ashby-de-la-Zouch, petty sessional division of Repton, deanery and electoral division of Melbourne. The soil is rich and fertile, part loam and clay, with limestone of superior quality on the east side. The ratable value is £4,104. The parish was formerly more prosperous, and since 1851 the population has decreased from 1,241 to 844 in 1891. In 1880 the hamlets of Southwood, Scaddows, Sicknall, and Repton Priory were incorporated with Ticknall for all civil purposes.

At the time of the Domesday Survey different parts of Ticknall were held by the king, Nigel de Stafford, and the Abbot of Burton. Henry I. granted the manor to Ralph, Earl of Chester, and succeeding earls alienated almost all their land here to the Priory of Repton, and the prior had the right of free warren over his manor of Tickenhall. Subsequently the manor was held under the priors by the family of Francis, to whom the property came through marriage with a daughter and coheiress of Ralph de Tickenhall. Many generations of the family resided here, and there were formerly some monuments to their memory in the old church. The next owners were the Abells. Edward Abell died, in 1596, seized of the manor of Ticknall, and some years later his son sold the manor to Sir John Harpur, whose descendant is the present owner.

The village of Ticknall is situated nine miles south of Derby, on the Derby and Ashby-de-la-Zouch Road, along which it stretches about two miles. The nearest railway station is Melbourne, $3\frac{1}{4}$ miles distant.

The chapel, dedicated to St. Thomas à Becket, is first mentioned in a deed about the year 1200, and in 1271 it was confirmed, along with the Mother Church of Repton, to the priory at that place. The present church, dedicated to St. George, was erected in 1842-3, at a cost of £4,500, chiefly contributed by the lord of the manor. It consists of chancel with north vestry, nave, side aisles, and tower surmounted by a spire, containing a peal of six bells. The style is after the Perpendicular Gothic, and the edifice may be described as well proportioned and handsome. The nave is separated from each aisle by five pointed arches resting on octagonal stone pillars. The east window is of stained glass, bearing figures of the four evangelists. Alterations have been made during the last few years, and a splendid brass eagle lectern, credence table, &c., added. Some ancient monuments have been preserved from the old church. One bears the incised effigy of a knight in plate armour, and an inscription to John Fraunceys, but the date is obliterated. Under an arched recess in the south wall, removed from the old building, is the effigy of a man in a civilian's dress, but without any to show whom it commemorates. The earliest register book, now extant, mences in 1626. The old church, which was taken down when the present one was built, stood about 50 yards to the south, and two fragments of covered with ivy have been left as mementoes of the old edifice. The living vicarage, value £260, patron Sir Vauncey Harpur Crewe, Bart., who is also proprietor. The present vicar is the Rev. T. J. Jones, B.A.

The Wesleyan Methodists and Baptists also have places of worship in the village, plain brick buildings, the former erected in 1815. There is but one school, which is now free, and is attended also by the children from Calke. There were formerly extensive lime quarries, brick and tile works, and a pottery works in Ticknall; of these industries there now remains only the brick kilns, which are worked for estate purposes; the lime quarries are closed, and the pottery has disappeared.

Knowle Hills is a beautiful stretch of country of about 44 acres, belonging to Sir F. Burdett, Bart. In this secluded spot, environed by luxuriant wood plantations of oak and beech, stood a house of peculiar construction, erected by Walter Burdett, a younger son of Sir Thomas Burdett, Bart., the first possessor of Foremark, to whom it was bequeathed by his father. Through some dissensions arising between Walter and his relatives, this romantic residence passed into the hands of a gentleman called Hardinge, who lived there for some years, and whose heir it was subsequently purchased by the late Sir Robert Burdett, who inhabited it while the hall at Foremark was being rebuilt, afterwards destroyed. To a portion of the ruins which was left standing a moderately-sized room has been attached for the accommodation of such visitors as may be attracted to the spot by the wild and beautiful scenery.

Tatshall Fee, one mile south from Ticknall, is an extra parochial estate about 60 acres, the property of Sir V. H. Crewe, Bart., formerly belonging to the Duke of Stamford.

CHARITIES.—Sir Henry Harpur, in 1744, conveyed to trustees the school which his father had built, and some land for the maintenance of a schoolmaster. The rents amount to about £100 per annum, and there is also a sum of money invested in consols yielding £3 4s. yearly. Harpur, Esq., by will in 1770, left £500 for the erection of a hospital or almshouses for poor families, and £2,000 for the maintenance of the inmates. The hospital was built in 1771 and comprises seven tenements with a plot of garden ground. The inmates are chosen from the parishes of Ticknall and Calke, and receive 4s. each per week, and occasional gifts of clothing. There is a benefaction from an unknown source of large doles of bread (200lbs.) weekly to forty poor people.

TRUSLEY.

Trusley is a small parish and township, containing 1,078 acres of land, belonging chiefly to Col. John Talbot Coke, who is lord of the manor; Samuel Higgott, Rolleston, Staffordshire; Mrs. Wright, Mrs. Boden, and Mrs. Cox. The soil is strong, in some places red marl, and is mostly laid down in grass for dairying purposes. The ratable value of the township is £1,604, and the population in 1891 was 111. Trusley is in Appletree hundred, electoral division of Etwall, poor law union of Burton-on-Trent, petty sessional division and county court district of Derby, rural district of Repton, and deanery of Longford.

This place appears in Domesday Book as Tozenai, and was held by one Hugh under Henry de Ferrers. A little later, Robert de Beusay, who then owned the manor of Trusley, gave an estate, now called Grangefields, to the abbey of Croxden, in Staffordshire; and about the same time the small manor or grange of Thursmanleigh (now Nunsfield) was given to the prioress and nuns of King's Mead, Derby. After the dissolution of religious houses these properties passed through various hands, and now belong, the former to Messrs. Boden and Wright, and the latter to Mrs. Cox. The Bewsays held the manor of Trusley till the reign of Henry III. (1216—1272), when it was purchased by the Odingsells, and it descended in this family to two sisters, coheirresses, one of whom became the wife of Thomas Coke, of Marchington, in the early part of the reign of Edward III. He settled at Trusley on his moiety of the manor, and was the direct male ancestor of Richard Coke, who, in 1569, purchased the other moiety, and became sole lord of the manor.

The village, which consists of the church and seven or eight houses, is situated seven miles W. from Derby, and about three from Mickleover station. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a small edifice of brick, with stone dressings, rebuilt in 1713, and consists of chancel, nave, and small bell turret on the west gable. The latter contains one bell, which bears the pre-Reform legend, "Ave Gratia Plena Dominus Tecum," in Old English letters, Lombardic capitals. The entrance doorway, which is of stone, and exhibits some creditable carving, is said to have belonged to the old hall of the Coke Trusley. There are several 17th and 18th century tablets to members of Coke family, and seven hatchments of their arms are on the south wall of nave. In a glass case in the vestry is preserved a relic of an old-time custom, a funeral garland or crown of white paper, which is said to have been carried at the funeral of an unmarried female member of the Coke family, over one hundred years ago. The living is a rectory, gross yearly value £158, in the gift of Col. J. T. Coke, and held by the Rev. William Hodges. The tithes were commuted for a rent-charge of £100 17s. 3d.

Long Lane is a village of scattered houses at the northern extremity of parish. A church was erected here in 1859, and a district, containing 3 acres, carved out of the parishes of Trusley, Sutton, and Brailsford, allotted to it. This edifice, styled Christ Church, consists of chancel, nave, and tower at side of the chancel, containing a clock and three bells. Several of the windows are filled with stained glass. The pulpit is carved out of a solid block of Derbyshire marble, and is adorned with bosses of Blue John. The living is a vicar worth £66 per annum, with residence, in the gift of the Rev. R. G. Buckston, held by the Rev. H. A. Hodges, M.A. A school was erected in 1865, and attended by 70 children. The Wesleyans have a small chapel here, built 1855.

Trusley is united with Dalbury Lees for the election of a rural district councillor.

WALTON-ON-TRENT.

This parish is situated on the east bank of the Trent, which here divides county from Staffordshire. It is in the hundred of Repton and Gresley, electoral division of Measham, petty sessional division of Swadlincote, union and court district of Burton-on-Trent, and rural district and deanery of Repton. The area, according to the union returns, is 2,266 acres, ratable value £4,825, and population in 1891 was 434. The soil is a strong loam, resting on a subsoil of light marl, in the northern part of the parish, and strong marl in the south. Wheat, oats, barley, mangel wurzels, and a few beans are grown; but about half of the land is laid down in grass. Richard Ratcliff, Esq., Stamford Loughborough, owns about two-thirds of the parish; and the remaining part belongs to Miss Disbrowe, Walton Hall; Mrs. Anson-Horton, Catton; and the rector of Walton. Mr. Ratcliff and Miss Disbrowe own the manorial rights, and their respective properties.

At the time of the Domesday Survey Walton was a royal manor, but shortly afterwards granted by the Conqueror to his nephew, Hugh Lupus, Earl of Chester, and it remained attached to that earldom till the end of the reign of Henry III. Subsequently it was granted to Sir John Delves, of Doddington, Cheshire, who had distinguished himself in the wars of Edward III., and appointed one of the justices of the King's Bench. At his death, in 1347, without surviving issue, the manor of Walton reverted to the Crown, and granted to William de Ferrers, Earl of Derby, whose principal residence was at Groby, in Leicestershire. Sir John de Ferrers, of Tamworth Castle, a staunch Royalist during the Cromwellian wars, obtained from Charles II. an exemplification of the grant of the manor of Walton-on-Trent. The above gentleman sold some of his Derbyshire lands to raise a marriage portion of £12,000 for his daughter Dorothy, and it is probable that a portion of Walton estate was then disposed of to the Taylors, who were certainly seated here before 1664. The Ferrers retained possession of the remainder till the early part of last century, when it passed, through the female line, to the Earl of Northampton; and again, by an heiress, to George, Viscount Townshend. On the death of the third Marquis Townshend, in 1855, without issue, the Walton property was sold to Mr. James Ridgeway; and it was purchased from this gentleman's sons, in 1875, by Richard Ratcliff, Esq., the present owner.

The portion of the estate purchased by the Taylors passed through four generations of that name, and then descended, through an heiress, to the Disbrowes, a family of repute in Northamptonshire. Major John Disbrowe married Jane Cromwell, sister of the Protector; but though thus closely connected with Oliver Cromwell, and doubtless favourable to the Commonwealth, the Disbrowes held aloof from any participation in the execution of Charles I. Samuel, the grandson of Major Disbrowe and Jane Cromwell, married into the Taylor family, and George, his son, eventually inherited the estates. Edward Disbrowe came to Walton in 1773, and was the first of the name settled here. He married Lady Charlotte Hobart, 4th daughter of George, 3rd Earl of Buckinghamshire, and was colonel of the Staffordshire militia. After the death of his wife in 1798, he resided chiefly at Windsor, which borough he represented in Parliament, and was Equerry to George III. Later on he was Vice-Chamberlain to Queen Charlotte and Master of St. Katharine's Hospital. Colonel Disbrowe died in 1818, leaving six children, of whom the eldest, Sir Edward Cromwell Disbrowe, entered the diplomatic service in 1810, and held several important offices. He was secretary to Sir Charles Stuart at the Court of Lisbon, and followed the armies as a civilian during the Peninsular War. He was with Lord Cathcart at Reichenbach, and crossed the Field of Leipsic just after the battle in 1813; and, being the bearer of despatches, had to make his way back to England through Russia and Sweden. He was Secretary of Legation at Copenhagen, and attended the Congress of Aix la Chapelle in 1818 as secretary to Lord Castlereagh. In 1822 he was returned as member of Parliament for Windsor, and three years later was named Minister Plenipotentiary to the Court of St. Petersburg. He held similar posts at Wurtemberg and Stockholm, and in 1836 went to the Hague as first Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary after the separation of Holland and Belgium. He married Anne, eldest daughter of the Honourable Robert Kennedy, and predeceased his wife four years in 1851, leaving two sons and two daughters. Edward Ametius, lieutenant and captain in the Coldstream Guards, was killed at Inkerman in 1854; and William Herbert John, after serving in the Crimean War as adjutant in the 17th Foot, died in Canada, in 1858, being then A.D.C. to Sir William Eyre, Commander-in-Chief. The property then devolved on the two surviving sisters, between whom it was divided—Walton estate falling to Charlotte Anne Albinia, and the Northamptonshire property to Jane Harriet, now the widow of Henry Christopher Wise, Esq., late M.P. for South Warwickshire.

Walton Hall, the seat of Miss Disbrowe, is a large rectangular building of brick, situated on gently rising ground near the river Trent, from which some fine views of the surrounding country are obtained. It was built between 1710 and 1715 by William Taylor, Esq., who was High Sheriff of the county in 1726. The drawing-room is a handsome apartment, and the railings of the principal staircase are worthy of notice. The walls are adorned with numerous family and other portraits, among which are two or three of Oliver Cromwell. In the entrance hall stands a large porphyry vase, upwards of four feet high, presented to Lady Disbrowe by Charles-John IX., King of Norway and Sweden, on her arrival at Stockholm in 1834.

The village is pleasantly situated on gently rising ground near the river, miles S. by W. from Burton-on-Trent, and about one mile from Barton & Walton railway station, on the opposite side of the Trent. The river is here crossed by a bridge of eight arches, erected by the Walton-on-Trent Bridge Co. in 1836, and a toll is exacted from each vehicle and footpassenger making use of it. Previous to that year the only means of crossing the river was by a ford at this spot, which was fraught with a considerable amount of danger.

The church (St. Laurence) is an ancient building of stone, originally founded soon after the Conquest, and still retaining a few traces of Norman work. There may be seen in a round-headed doorway, now blocked up, in the north wall, and in a zig-zag moulding on a wall plate on the south side of the nave, just above the foundations. A transeptal chantry was added in 1334 by Richard Wale, the then rector, and endowed with six messuages, one carucate of arable land, two acres of meadow, and 1½d. in rents. The church was barbarously restored in 1827, and again more carefully in 1868. It comprises chancel, nave, south aisle, transept (now used as a vestry), and western embattled tower. The latter is in the Perpendicular style, and was probably erected by the Ferrers soon after they came into possession of Walton. On the west front are three shields carved in stone, two of them bearing the mascles of Ferrers, and the other the arms of Gresley and Wasteneys, quarterly. The chancel belongs to the early part of the 13th century, and contains a triple sedilia, piscina, and aumbry. There is no chancel arch now, but the staircase of twelve steps that once led to the rood loft still remains in the north wall. There are also three sedilia, a piscina in the chantry (now the vestry), but their original character is obliterated by a thick coating of stucco. The nave is separated from the aisle by three pointed arches, resting upon stucco-coated pillars. Some of the windows are stained glass memorials, and formerly there was much heraldic glass in the church which is noticed by Wyrley, the Staffordshire antiquary, who visited Walton in 1590.

There are several ancient monuments, the oldest is the mutilated stone effigy of a priest, within a recessed arch, in the chantry. It bears no inscription, and is generally supposed to represent the founder of the chantry. In the chancel floor is a marble slab bearing a very fine brass representing a priest in albs, kneeling in prayer, and holding a chasuble, in the act of consecration. There were formerly on it a Latin epitaph and marginal inscription, but these have been torn off; they are, however, quoted by Wyrley, and show that it is the tomb of Robert Morley, a former rector of the church, who died in 1492. There are also 17th century slabs to the memory of Penelope Ferrers and her daughter, and others of the same century to two rectors and two rectors' wives. In the chantry is an alabaster slab commemorating Agnes, wife of Robert Boucher, who died in 1588, and another with an inscription quite illegible, except the word "William Whittinge and . . . anno domini 1598." This church is the burial place of the Disbrowes, and there are several handsome tablets to the memory of members of that family.

The tower contains a clock, presented by Miss Disbrowe in 1887, and three bells, one modern, two ancient. The earliest register begins in 1587, but is illegible for the first five years.

The living is a rectory, net value £560, and held by the Rev. F. C. Fisher, M.A., since 1860. The patronage was attached to the manor until sold by the Marquis of Townshend in the early part of the present century. It subsequently passed through several hands, and is now vested in the present rector. The tithes are commuted, and the rent-charge is £501. The school, with master's house attached, is a structure of brick, erected in 1878. It has an endowment of £600, invested in the three per cent. consols. The Baptists have a small chapel in the village.

A short distance from the village, and near the river, is the Old Hall, the ancient home of the lords of Walton. A large portion of it was pulled down many years ago, and the remaining part converted into cottages; but the high walled garden, the height of the rooms, a curious madrepoire chimney piece, and the oak panelling, testify to its former importance.

Between the Old Hall and Borough Hill farm are the remains of a Roman Encampment, and around the farm premises human skulls and bones, evidently of ancient date, have been frequently dug up. About sixty years ago was found a brass seal, which was supposed to have been used in the granting of indulgences.

WESTON-ON-TRENT.

This parish contains 1,959 acres of land, lying on the north bank of the river Trent, in the hundred of Morleston and Litchurch, petty sessional division and county court district of Derby, union and rural district of Shardlow, county council electoral division and deanery of Melbourne. The midland railway and the Trent and Mersey canal pass through the parish, and add considerably to the ratable value, which is £4,006. The population in 1891 was 322. The surface is picturesquely diversified, and the soil, which lies on the sandstone formation, is well watered and fertile. The land is chiefly in grass, for dairy purposes, and a large quantity of milk is sent daily to London. Sir Robert Rodney Wilmot, Bart., is lord of the manor and principal landowner. The Glebe farm, 299 acres in extent, belongs to the Rev. John Wadham; and William Machin, Papplewick, Notts, and E. C. S. Holden, Aston-on-Trent, have some land in the parish.

The manor of Weston, at the time of the Domesday Survey, belonged to the Crown, and subject to it were Aston and Shardlow. Shortly afterwards it was given by the Conqueror to his nephew, Hugh Lupus, Earl of Chester, by whom a third part of the manor was conferred on the Abbey of St. Werburgh, Chester. The Verdons, who held under the Earls of Chester, also gave considerable lands here to the same abbey. After the dissolution of the abbey, Henry VIII. gave the manor and advowson of the church to Sir William Paget, his Secretary of State. Sir Thomas Paget and his brother Charles, being suspected of favouring the claims of Mary Queen of Scots, were attainted, and their estates confiscated. James I., in the 10th year of his reign, granted this manor to Anthony Rowland and his wife; and in 1649 it was purchased from this family by Robert Holme, whose descendant sold it, about the middle of last century, to an ancestor of the present owner.

The village is pleasantly situated seven miles S.E. from Derby, and near the station of its own name on the Derby and Trent branch of the Midland railway. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is an interesting old edifice, consisting of a nave with north and south aisles, and a tower at the west end surmounted by an octagonal spire. The south porch is a brick and wood structure believed to have been erected about two centuries ago. There was a church at Weston at the time of the Domesday Survey, but no part of the present edifice is anterior to the Early English style, which prevailed in the latter part of the 11th and the early years of the 13th century. The chancel belongs to this period. The rest of the church appears to have been rebuilt in the Decorated style early in the 14th century; and about a century later the present flat roof, covering both nave and aisles, was substituted for the previous one of high pitch. The church underwent a thorough restoration in 1876-7, from the designs of Messrs. J. J. & Evans, at a cost of £1,200. The utmost care was taken to preserve as much of the old fabric as possible. The chancel is spacious, and retains the sedilia and piscina niche. The east window of three small lights, and the six lancets in the south wall, are filled with stained glass. On the north wall is a large marble monument to the memory of Richard Sale, LL.B., prebendary of Lichfield and rector of Weston, who died in 1625, and Dorothy, his wife, died in 1615. The sculptured effigies of husband and wife, and of their four children, have been removed to the east end of the south aisle. Two of the children are represented in cradles, the other six, like their parents, in kneeling postures. At one side of the children is a skull, and at the other a skeleton armed with a spade and pick. Each aisle is separated from the nave by three lofty arches springing from circular pillars, and had formerly an altar at the east end. The nave and aisles are seated with strong benches of oak, and the chancel stalls of the same material. The pulpit is also of oak upon a stone base, like the font, bears the date 1611. The tower, containing three 18th-century bells, is embattled, and a similar embattled parapet is carried round the nave and aisles. The living is a rectory, worth £279, with residence, in the gift of Sir R. Wilmot, Bart., and held since 1863 by the Rev. John Wadham, M.A.

The Wesleyans and Baptists have chapels in the village, and there is a small school belonging to the church.

The old Hall, erected by the Ropers in the 17th century, is now a farmhouse in the occupation of Mr. Porter. The Hall and farm, containing 333 acres, were purchased from Mr. E. H. Pares in 1893, by Mr. Machin, of Papplewick, Nottingham.

WILLESLEY.

Willesley is a small parish and township, containing 808 acres and 64 inhabitants, in the hundred of Repton and Gresley (locally in the West Goscote hundred of Leicestershire), petty sessional division of Swadlincote, county court district and union of Ashby-de-la-Zouch, and deanery of Repton. The Earl of Loudoun is sole owner and lord of the manor, besides whom there is only one other ratepayer in the parish.

The earliest notice of this place is in the will of Wulfric Spott, who, in 1002, bequeathed his lands at Willesley to the Abbey of Burton. In Domesday Book Wineslei (Willesley) is entered as belonging to the King and Henry de Ferrers, and a little later we find that one of these moieties was held direct from the King by the Abbot of Burton, and the other belonged to the family of Ingwardby. The abbey retained its portion till the dissolution of monasteries, when the abbey lands were granted to the Sheffield family, from whom they soon afterwards passed to the Abneys. This family was originally of Abney in the Peak, where it was seated about the time of the Norman Conquest. About the middle of the 15th century, William Abney married one of the two daughters and coheirresses of William Ingwardby, and thus came into possession of a moiety of Willesley. The elder branch of the family resided here for about 400 years, and terminated towards the end of last century in an heiress, who married General Sir Charles Hastings, Bart., from whom the estate has descended to the Earl of Loudoun, the present owner.

Willesley Hall, the seat of the Right Honourable Charles Edward Hastings Abney-Hastings, Earl of Loudoun, is a large and handsome Elizabethan structure, situated in a picturesque park of about 134 acres. In front of the hall is a fine sheet of water, covering about 30 acres, which is said by tradition to occupy the site of the ancient village.

The church, dedicated to St. Thomas, is an ancient edifice, situated near the hall, and consists of nave, chancel, and a low tower, containing two bells. It was originally a dependent chapel, but has possessed full parochial rights since the Reformation. The style of architecture is the Decorated of the first half of the fourteenth century. There is no chancel arch, but a difference in the height of the roofs marks the division. In the floor are three alabaster slabs, but the figures and inscriptions are so worn that they are only partially decipherable. There are mural tablets on the walls to various members of the Hastings family, and near the north wall is a handsome tomb of black marble, the sides of which are ornamented with shields of arms, showing the various family alliances. On the upper slab is inscribed, "Here lieth the body of the Hon. Sir Charles Abney-Hastings, of Willesley, Bart., and lord of Packington, in the county of Leicester, son and heir of General Sir Charles Hastings, Bart., and Parnell, his wife, daughter and sole heiress of Thomas Abney, Esq., of Willesley. Sir Charles died the 30th day of July, in the year of our Lord God 1858, and in the 66th year of his age, in the hope of a blessed resurrection." The living is a vicarage, worth £63 per annum, in the gift of the Earl of Loudoun, and held by the Rev. Canon J. Denton, M.A., of Ashby-de-la-Zouch, who holds service every Sunday afternoon.

WILLINGTON.

Willington is a parish and township lying on the north bank of the Trent the hundred of Morleston and Litchurch, electoral division of Etwall, sessional division and county court district of Derby, poor law union of Burton-Trent, and rural district and deanery of Repton.

The total acreage of the parish is 1,300; ratable value, £8,939; and population 596. Sir Francis Burdett, Bart., Foremark Hall, is lord of the manor and principal landowner. The following have also estates here, viz.: Rev. Benjamin W. Spilsbury, Findern; William Cecil Salt, Esq., Willington Hall; and trustees of Sir John Port's charity. The soil is a mixed gravel and deep and generally fertile. Wheat, oats, barley, mangels and turnips are grown a considerable portion is in grass.

The manor of Willetune (Willington), at the time of the Domesday Survey was held by Ralph Fitzhubert. Shortly afterwards, William the Conqueror granted the church and a portion of the manor to Burton Abbey, and this was confirmed by Henry II. The other portion of the manor passed to a family named, from the place, Willington, who were seated here soon after the Conqueror. Nicholas de Willington gave the church and manor to the prior and canon of Repton, in 1223, to whom the rectory was afterwards appropriated and a vicar ordained. After the dissolution of religious houses the manor and tithes were seized by the Crown, and eventually, about 1554, became the property of Sir John Port, the founder of Repton School and Etwall Hospital.

The village is pleasantly situated on the north bank of the Trent, 6½ miles S.W. from Derby, 4½ miles N.E. from Burton-on-Trent, and near the Repton and Willington station on the South Staffordshire branch of the Midland railway. The Grand Trunk canal also passes close to the village. The river is crossed by a substantial stone bridge erected in 1839 at a cost of £12,000 inclusive of the approaches. A toll of one penny per head is charged. The church, dedicated to St. Michael, is an ancient ivy-clad edifice of stone, consisting of chancel, nave, north transept, and a western tower. The latter is plain and very plain, and was built in 1824 at a cost of £80. It contains three bells which were re-cast in 1824, and previously hung in a square turret on the west gable. The south doorway, now built up and hidden beneath a covering of Norman style. The transept is a modern addition. The font, which stands in the chancel, formerly belonged to Egginton church. The memorials of the dead are neither numerous nor interesting. The church is seated with old-fashioned, high-backed pews to accommodate about 250 persons. The registers date from 1680. The living is a vicarage in the gift of W. Cecil Salt, Esq. In the Valor Ecclesiasticus of Henry VIII. it is valued at £4 16s. and is now worth £110 net. The Rev. Thomas George Strong is the present vicar. The Baptists and Primitive Methodists have each places of worship.

A new school, with residence attached, was built about 17 years ago and superseded a small one erected by the Rev. F. W. Spilsbury, in 1831.

The village feast is held the first Sunday after the 19th of September.

At Dale, near the village, is Mr. Salt's stud farm, where several horses of the "Royal Albert" strain are kept for stud purposes. These are at the service of the tenant farmers of the neighbourhood at one-half the usual price charged to the public, and permission is also given to exhibit the produce at a show or shire sale, at which they have been very successful. The farm is drained, and there is a constant supply of fresh spring water conveyed in pipes to the various buildings and drinking troughs in the fields. The stud premises are open to the inspection of the public any day during the week, Sundays excepted.

CHARITIES.—Benjamin Spilsbury, in 1815, left a rent-charge of £5 out of property in Willington for the benefit of the poor; and the Rev. Fras. Ward Spilsbury, at his death in 1841, left a sum of money now producing £6 per annum, which is distributed in May.

WINSHILL.

Winshill, formerly a township in the parish of Burton-on-Trent, was constituted a separate parish for all civil and ecclesiastical purposes in 1867. Its area, according to the overseers' returns, is 1,048 acres, ratable value £13,905, and population (1891) 3,752. The surface is varied and the soil fertile. The principal landowners are the Marquis of Anglesey (who is lord of the manor), John Gretton, Esq., and the Earl of Carnarvon. It is situated in the hundred of Repton and Gresley, rural deanery and petty sessional division of Repton, Burton union and county court district, and partly in the electoral division of Repton and Swadlincote, and partly in the municipal borough of Burton-on-Trent.

The village of Winshill stands on the east bank of the Trent opposite Burton, in which borough it is now included. It has increased considerably in late years by the erection of many new streets and a large number of genteel residences, which are inhabited by the tradesmen and professional men of Burton. A church, dedicated to St. Mark, was erected here in 1869, at the sole expense of the late John Gretton, Esq. It is a handsome edifice of stone, in the Gothic style, consisting of chancel, nave, north and south aisles, and west tower, surmounted by a lofty octagonal spire, which, from the elevated situation of the church, is a conspicuous object in the landscape for many miles around. The tower contains a clock and six bells. The nave is divided from the aisles by four well proportioned arches on each side. The chancel arch is a very fine piece of work, in granite and marble. The chancel is lighted by a handsome stained glass window of seven lights, depicting various events in Scripture history; below this is a stone reredos, having the Decalogue, the Lord's Prayer, and the Apostles' Creed, inscribed in its seven Gothic panels. The beautiful west window and several others were the gift of the present John Gretton, Esq., the patron of the living. There is a very handsome font, standing on a base of three steps. The head is square, each side being adorned with very finely carved figures. The nave and aisles are fitted with open benches to accommodate 550. The living is a vicarage, of the net yearly value of £253, and held by the Rev. R. G. Frampton. The Vicarage House, a brick building standing within its grounds, was erected by the parishioners at the same time as the church. In connection with the church is a Parish Room and Institute, erected by subscription in 1888. The village has also its Club and Masonic lodge.

The members of the United Methodist Free Church, the Primitive Methodists, and the Wesleyans have places of worship here. The latter were built in 1863 and 1878 respectively. A small National school was erected by subscription in 1846, in which religious service was held previous to the erection of the church. This school was taken over by the Burton-on-Trent School in 1875, and has since been very considerably enlarged. The average attendance for the past year was 211. A separate school for girls and infants was erected by the Board in 1874, in Hawfield Lane.

On the bank of the Trent, about one mile from the village, is a manufactory; and there are also several brick works in the parish.

Alms-houses for five poor aged women were erected and endowed by W. Wardle, an inhabitant of the township, in 1887. They form a neat block of storey brick cottages, with freestone dressings, on the Hawfield road.

DERBY.

A HISTORICAL SKETCH OF THE TOWN.

By JOHN WARD, F.S.A.

BRITAIN figures in history from the age of Alexander the Great, or about the 4th century, ante Christum, when Pytheas, "the Humboldt of Antiquity," explored the north-western regions of Europe, and paved the way for the Greek merchants of Marseilles to resort thither for tin and timber. But the references—for they are mere references—of the Greek writers to this country are vague and intermixed with fable. We obtain no sure gleams of the interior or of its inhabitants and their civilization from this source; and the glowing descriptions of pre-Roman Britain which the Welsh Triads of a later date indulged in, are wholly fanciful. Dense darkness covers the interior until the advent of the Romans. With them authentic history commences, but Derby finds no place in their historians.

The voice of Archæology is equally silent. There is no record of the discovery within the limits of the old borough, of coins, pottery, or other vestiges of human handiwork, which can be said to connect it with Romano-British or earlier times. Hutton, the quaintly satirical old historian, said the most that could be said in favour of a British origin to the town, but it did not amount to much, nor did he himself think it did. It remained for later and less cautious writers to assert such an origin. His surmise a century ago, that where All Saints' Church stands the Britons may have had a sanctuary, was the germ of the unhesitating statement of a recent writer that, "like Notre Dame, All Saints' occupies the site of a Pagan temple."

We said above, "the old borough." This limitation was necessary; for like most other manufacturing towns, Derby has enlarged its borders, and has absorbed in so doing villages and clusters of houses previously separated from it by stretches of green fields. One such place is Little Chester, which, 50 years ago, was a rural village half-a-mile from the town; now connected therewith by streets and buildings. As this place was a Roman station, Derby may be said to have acquired a Roman origin by its enlargement, hence it will not be inappropriate to commence this historical sketch with an account of

LITTLE CHESTER.

From a historical point of view, Derbyshire labours under the disadvantage of finding no place in the Itinerary of Antoninus, the Geography of Ptolemy, the Notitia Imperii, nor the Pentingerian Tables. The only guide we have (apart from Archæology) is the Chorography of Ravennas, attributed to the 6th century. In the list of stations between Chester and Leicester, its writer mentions one Derbentio. This, for various reasons, is so obviously Little Chester, that no one has disputed the identity.

When the Romans first established themselves on this spot is not known. It could not have been before A.D. 53 or 54, when the great general, Ostorius Scapula, threw his chain of forts from the Severn to the Wash, to separate the northern barbarism from the conquered south. Within ten years of this approximate date, Caractacus and his Silures were defeated, and the rising of Boadicea was quelled. Then followed a short period of inaction, during which the conquerors were content to stand on the defensive, and hold what they had gained. In A.D. 75, however, Frontinus resumed the conquest of Britain; and this was finally accomplished by his able and judicious successor to the prætorate, Agricola, who set the government of the province on a sure footing, and did more than any of his predecessors or successors to popularise Roman culture and institutions among the British youth. It was during his administration, and that of his immediate successors, that the marvellous system of military roads and permanent camps, or stations, was perfected. One of the chief highways of the country was a road, afterwards known as the Rykneld Street, connecting the north-east with the mouth of the Severn. This crossed the Derwent immediately above Little Chester, and as recent as within the past century the piers of the old bridge could be seen when the water was low. (See Hutton.) We can well understand the motive for a station at this point: it was customary, in fact necessary, for bridges to be thus defended. There is every reason for believing that this castrum was constructed simultaneously with the great road; that so important a highway would be constructed as soon as the country was pacified; hence that both road and camp were constructed within a few years before or after A.D. 86—the year of Agricola's recall.

There are but scanty remains of the Roman station. The only visible masonry in situ is some excellent ashlar in the cellar of the Manor House Farm. The foundations of the ramparts are occasionally touched in digging; but as recently as 1721, Dr. Stukeley, the antiquary, could trace the outline of the castrum sufficiently well to give its form and extent. It was (to use his words) "of a square form, and the castrum five hundred feet by six hundred. Within the walls are foundations of houses, and in the fields around the castle may be seen tracks of streets laid with gravel." So far back as when Philip Kinder wrote in the seventeenth century of "ye Romane monies there found," objects of this period have frequently been turned up; but, alas! it is to be feared that those put into print have formed but a small proportion of the whole.

Apart from its military value, the situation of Derbentio was excellent. The oblong castrum, with its gateways, its solid masonry, and its red-tiled roofs, lay in a broad flat expanse of rich alluvium, supplying a wealth of pasturage and gardens. Several roads converged upon Little Chester, and can be readily traced. First, there was the main road, descending from where Morley and Breadsall now are, to the Derwent at this station. On the opposite side of the river it climbed up Darley Bank, and struck out in a straight line for Wall, near Lichfield, roughly following the present Old Uttoxeter and Burton Roads. The only other road on the east side of the bridge was a branch-way pointing towards Ratæ (Leicester): the present Nottingham Road for a few miles is on its site. On the west side of the bridge, one road struck out due west for Rocester and the Watling Street, thence to Chester. The long straight lane called Long Lane, near Longford, is a fragment of this branch-way. Another on the same side pointed to the mines of Wirksworth and to Buxton, which was appropriately called Aquæ. So far as can be made out, considerable sections of the Duffield Road represent its track, but above Duffield and right on to Buxton its ridge is often very noticeable.

With the withdrawal of the Roman legions, and the letters of the Emperor Honorius bidding the British cities to look after themselves in future, darkness again envelopes the district. Derbentio may have met the fate of many a city and camp of the time, sacked by Picts from the north or Anglians from the Elbe; its shattered ramparts and blackened walls perpetuating the story of its fall for generations. Or—for it is mere conjecture—it may have survived the English invasion. One thing, however, is certain, the new holders of the land gave the place its present name. They heard the natives call it the castrum. They caught up the name, and on English lips it was softened into chester, and henceforth Chester became its proper name. Why it was designated "Little" we can only guess. There is the Great Chester on the Dee, perhaps ours was designated "Little" by way of distinction.

But we must pass by four centuries of turmoil before we meet with Derby in history. Slowly the tribes of Angles, Saxons, and Jutes coalesced into rival kingdoms, whose normal condition was mutual warfare. The most central of these kingdoms was Mercia, and in the heart of Mercia was our district. The conversion of this kingdom to Christianity took place about the middle of the seventh century, and the period which intervened between that event and the great battle of Ellendun in 825, was that of Mercian ascendancy. This was a turning-point in English history; henceforth Wessex was supreme, supremacy led to the union of the English people. With the ascendancy of Wessex came the yearly increasing troubles with the "Danishmen." They ravished the sea-board, then emboldened they made incursions into the interior, until at length, in 866, they commenced their deliberate attempt of conquest of the whole country. It was during the interval, between the death of Ellendun and this date, that fell upon Derby.

THE FIRST GLEAM OF HISTORY

Alfred, of Northumbria, had been driven from his throne by his rebellious subjects, who were in league with the Danes. His son, Alkmund, seeking to recover it, was treacherously put to death by the reigning prince of the Mercians. Eventually he was buried at Lilleshall, in Shropshire, and received the honours of sainthood. Years afterwards, in consequence of a threatened incursion of the Danes, his remains were removed to Derby for safety. The townspeople carried them with joy into the town, and erected over his shrine the church that bears his name. From this time until the Reformation, St. Alkmund was the patron saint of Derby. The information, it is true, comes to us from a late source, but there is little doubt that the story is substantially true.

DANISH DERBY.

In spite of two great incursions of the Danes—the "great army" of the "Saxon Chronicle"—into this district in 868 and 870, Mercia still remained English and independent; but it is significantly recorded of the years 873, that "the Mercians made peace with the army." This only delayed the impending doom. In 874 "the army" again invaded Mercia, took up its quarters at Repton, near Derby, a favourite residence and burial place of the Mercian kings, destroyed the famous monastery there, which may justly be regarded as the cradle of mid-English Christianity, and expelled King Burgred. The king placed on the throne an unpatriotic thane—a mere puppet in their hands. Ceolwulf, and thus to Mercia was accorded the merest semblance of independence. But only for a brief season; three years later (877) "the army" commenced the apportionment of this kingdom upon a very similar principle to that adopted by William the Conqueror two centuries later, only, in the present case, the king and his adherents were allowed to share the spoil. All England, north of the Thames, was now under Danish rule, and although in the following year the victories of Alfred led to the recovery of a large portion of Mercia, the portion remained within that portion of the country known as the Danelagh, whose solemn "frith" of Wedmore confirmed to the Danes. This peace was of enduring character. For 18 years the land had comparative rest.

What the immediate effects of Danish rule were upon Derby we cannot say, but it is reasonable to think that with the change of ownership came the change of name, recorded by Fabius Ethelwerd. We know that, at a later stage of Danish rule, the town was of great importance; but we may also infer from the translation hither of the relics of St. Alkmund for safety, and the removal of the body of Ethelwulf from so distant a place as Reading, presumably for the same reason, that the Danes found it already a place of some importance and strength.

No attempt was made to set up a central government in the Danelagh. Each town became the nucleus of authority in their respective districts, and the districts were linked together in a loose confederacy. Probably, at first, the town of any size was thus the head of a little state; but ultimately their number was reduced to five—Derby, Lincoln, Stamford, Leicester, and Nottingham. Through the supremacy of these towns, the Danelagh was popularly known as the Femborgene, or "Five Burgs." According to Green ("A History of the English People") "Each of these 'Five Boroughs' seems to have been ruled by its earl, with his separate 'post;' within each, twelve 'lawmen' admin-

Danish law, while a common justice-court existed for the whole confederacy." It is remarkable that of these "Five Burgs," Derby alone received a Danish name. This is noteworthy, for place-names die hard. It certainly looks as though Derby was very Danish indeed. Perhaps the Anglian town was so utterly desolated by the Danes, that in their hands it arose practically a new town.

Taking advantage of the lull in the great Anglo-Danish struggle for supremacy, we will turn aside to consider the significance of the PLACE-NAMES.

Northweorthig (or, as we would say, Northworth) and Derby. The one is wholly Anglo-Saxon; and the termination, at least, of the other is typically Danish. North, of course, is self-explanatory. Worth, unfortunately, is not very clear; but probably it had not the definite meaning of the common place-name terminations, ton and ham. A "tun" was, to all intents, the head of a manor, by which we mean the house of the lord surrounded with those of his dependents. Hence these "tuns" were more often than not designated by the names of their owners—presumably their first owners—as Osmaston and Alkmonton, near Derby, which mean Osmund's and Alkmund's "tuns." Ham has practically the same meaning. The essential significance of worth is that which is protected or warded. But it is not clear whether it was a place protected or warded by virtue of its own defences or stockades, or as dependent upon some distant manor and thus under the protection of its lord; in other words, whether it was a fortified place or an outlying possession of a "tun" or "ham."

The prefix north, of course, carries our thoughts southwards, just as Weston-on-Trent turns them eastwards. We find in the latter case an Aston (east-tun); but nowhere in our district, either past or present, was there a Southworth. We may lay it down as a general rule, that when a place designated by north, south, west, or east, has no correlated place-name in its vicinity, it was so designated in respect of some originally larger or older place. Such is Repton to Derby: this village, as we noticed above, was the residence and burial place of the Mercian kings, and the starting point and head see of mid-English Christianity; and Derby seems to have been royal property from a most remote period. To these kings, seated at Repton, their vil of Derby would be their north "worth."

We will now consider the name, Derby. By is a very common place-name-ending in districts where the Danes settled, and is practically the equivalent of ton and ham. The prefix is less easy. The usual explanation is that it is the Anglo-Saxon deor, a forest beast (whence our deer); and the arms of the town—the familiar Buck in the Park—are pointed to in triumphant corroboration. Heraldry, however, is of much more recent invention, and the heralds were anything but critical etymologists. Where they could, they played on the name, creating canting devices. Der sounded like deer: that was sufficient; the arms of Derby were made to display a deer. It is quite likely that Deoraby, the ancient form of the name, was an Anglo-Saxon rendering of the Danish name upon the same principle: there always has been a popular weakness for substituting for names of unknown meaning, others of similar sound but known meaning, as the modern rendering of "Old Man" for the old British "Alt Maen" (high hill), near Coniston. The objection to the deor derivation is the improbability that there would be sufficient forest beasts in the vicinity of Derby, to characterize the place by their presence. It was already a town before the Danes came; and for centuries previously—ever since the Romans first built their station at Little Chester—the district must have been under cultivation. Where then were the forests in the vicinity to harbour these animals? A more feasible derivation is from the river Derwent. Few names have undergone greater mutations than this river-name. Darwen, Darent, and Dart, are all forms of Derwent. The Derbyshire Derwent has been popularly called the "Darrent," time out of mind. Derwent-by might easily pass through the forms of Darent-by and Darra-by, and finally find stability in Darby, the old pronunciation of Derby, so that the relationship of the town to the river is analogous to that of Dartford. Or, the old British common name for water, dwr, the initial syllable of Derwent (dwr-gwent, fair water) may have survived the English conquest in common with the existing name Danes, finding that the river was called the "Dwr" as well as the "Dwr-"; might for the sake of simplicity have adopted the former to designate the river or its banks—thus, "Dwr-by." Unfortunately, we are ignorant of the form of the Danish name; but assuming that it was usually pronounced Deoraby we can well understand its taking the form of Deoraby in Anglo-Saxon literature.

From this digression we return to take up the thread of history.

DANISH DERBY (RESUMED).

During the latter years of Alfred's reign, and the first ten of his successor (Edward The Elder), the Danes resumed at intervals their old restless and piratical habits. A Danish rising in 910 compelled Edward to renounce the Treaty of Wedmore, and to gird himself to the conquest of the Danelagh. He invaded East Anglia, leaving to his brother-in-law, Ethelred, the Earl of Mercia, the reduction of the Midlands. Through the Earl's death in the following year, this work devolved upon his energetic widow, Ethelfleda, the "Lady of the Mercians," as the old chroniclers loved to call her—a lady upon whom descended in full measure the spirit of her father Alfred. "Advancing along the line of the Trent, she fortified Tamworth, and Stafford as its headquarters; a rising in Gwent called her back to the Welsh border, her army at Brecknock; and its King no sooner fled for shelter to the Northmen (Danes) whose aid he had risen, than Ethelfleda at once closed on Derby. Raids into Middle-England failed to draw the Lady of Mercia from her prey; and was hardly her own, when, turning southward, she forced the surrender of Leicester." It was in 917 that Derby fell into her hands, and the event is described in the "Saxon Chronicle:"—"This year before Lammas, Aethelfleda, lady of the Mercians, God helping her, got possession of the fortress which is Derby, with all that owed obedience thereto; and there also were slain, the gates, four of her thanes, which to her was a cause of sorrow." Florio-Brown, Worcester, makes the exact date to be August 7th. This fortress-builder died the following year; and although through her prowess

DERBY WAS AGAIN ANGLIAN,

it required 20 years of almost incessant fighting before the North was completely subdued. This was accomplished under the wise Athelstan, who, in the pursuit of his success, assumed the proud title of "King of England." One of the measures of this prince, the prohibition of coining except in the king's "burhs" (fortified places), throws an interesting ray of light on the status of Derby at this time, for coins struck in this town in this and subsequent reigns, until Stephen's reign, are known to exist. The subjugation of the North was of short duration. Immediately after the death of Athelstan, 940, the whole of the north of England, the "Five Burghs," broke out into revolt, and for two years

THE DANES AGAIN HELD DERBY.

The recovery of the "Five Burghs" by the new king, Edmund, appears to have been as easy as it was rapid. This, perhaps, was due to unwillingness on the part of the Danish residents to take part in the insurrection. The "Saxon Chronicle" represents them as under subjection to the northern heathens

"by need constrained of heathen men, in captive chains,

and that Edmund, in wresting back these towns, "redeemed" them from the resistance of the North, however, was prolonged until 954, after which the Danelagh ceased to be a force in English politics. "North might part from South; men of Yorkshire might again cross swords with men of the shire; but their strife was henceforth a local strife between men of the shire: it was a strife of Englishmen with Englishmen, and not of Englishmen with northmen." (Green.)

For a century following Edmund's recovery of the "Five Burghs," there is little to record of Derby. In 1013, the imbecility of Ethelred the Unready brought about the successful invasion of the country—civil war it practically amounted to—by the fierce Vikings, under their leader Sweyn. In his progress from the Humber southwards "all the Northumbrians submitted to him, and all the people of Lindesey, and afterwards the people of the Five Boroughs, and, soon after, all the army north of Watling Street; and hostages were delivered to him from every shire." ("Saxon Chronicle.") Sweyn was proclaimed King of England at Bath; and he died the next year. Ethelred struck a blow for the sovereignty. In connection he sent his son, Edmund Ironside, in 1015, with an army to the Five Burghs, evidently on account of the uncertain attitude of the crafty Earl of Mercia, Edric, who, a little later, deserted to the Vikings. These references to the "Five Burghs," although vague, show that these towns retained this designation long after the Danelagh ceased to exist.

It is pleasant to turn from this chronicle of bloodshed to the glimpses, for this remarkable document draws a comparison of the town of Edward the Confessor's time with that of William the Conqueror's. It should, however, be borne in mind that this book does not profess to give a general account of the various places which come under its notice. It is essentially a fiscal document. The Conqueror, with astute statesmanship, ordered its compilation with the primary view of ascertaining the financial resources of the Crown. In doing this, the Commissioners were instructed to compare existing dues payable to the King with those paid to his predecessor, Edward the Confessor—this with a view to appease the people generally, who revered the memory of that King as the last ruler of their race, and contrasted his "good laws" with the tyranny of the Norman rule. As, however, William obviously had in view some better system of taxation, the Commissioners were wont to add such other facts to their returns as were likely to be of service to that end.

In the retrospect of the Confessor's time, we learn that the town possessed 243 burgesses (householders: full citizens as distinguished from the more or less servile inhabitants), 6 churches, and 14 mills; that the annual revenue due to the Crown was £24; and that adjoining it were 12 carucates of hidable land, that is, land subject to the payment of geld. This land was tenanted by twelve of the burgesses who possessed between them twelve ploughs, although eight were found as a rule to be sufficient to do the work. These twelve carucates must not be taken as representing all the extra-urban land held by the burgesses. Only land under cultivation paid the tax, and then only provided it did not lie in the King's demesne. As very much of the town and the surrounding country was, in the language of Domesday Book, "terra regis"—ancient demesne of the Crown—it is almost certain that many of the burgesses would have stretches of arable upon it, and not being subject to this tax, these lands would find no place in the Commissioners' returns. The carucate, at first, was simply the amount of land which could be ploughed with one plough-team, drawn by eight oxen yoked four a-breast; but ultimately it came to be recognised as a fixed measure, usually said to be equivalent to 120 acres, but probably varying in different parts of the country. Assuming that the Domesday carucate was 120 acres, the Derby burgesses possessed 1,440 acres of taxable cultivated land in the vicinity of the town. Two-thirds of the tax and toll forfeitures, and of all customs, went to the King, while one-third of them went to the Earl (of Mercia). Two of the churches were upon the King's demesne. These were collegiate churches, the one with seven clerks who held freely two carucates of land at Little Chester; and the other with six clerks who similarly held nine bovates (a little more than one carucate) at Quarn and Little Eaton. These are respectively identified with St. Alkmund's and All Saints' churches. Of the remaining four, two can be identified as St. Michael's and St. Peter's. The one belonged to Tochi, a Saxon thane, who owned Alvaston, Elvaston, Oekbrook, Egginton, and other places; and the other to Leurig, the holder of Boulton, Crich, Ashover, Willington, &c. Until recently, Alvaston was a chapelry of St. Michael's, and Boulton of St. Peter's. The other two churches were probably St. Werburgh's and St. Mary's, a church which disappeared before the Reformation.

An interval of twenty years separates the date (1085) of Domesday from the reign of the Confessor; but every page of this record bears witness to the depletion of population and depreciation of property caused by the insurrection and unsettled condition of things which followed the Conquest. Derby was an exception to the general rule. In 1085, the number of burgesses had shrunk to 140, of whom 40 were "lesser ones," probably burgesses under age. The number of houses in their number was represented by 103 houses which were "waste," no longer rendered tax. The churches remained the same, but three of the mills which were in private hands were now owned by Norman lords. The mills were reduced to ten. The annual tax to the King was raised to £30. This rise was to some extent, but not wholly, counterbalanced by the addition to the borough of the King's manor of Litchurch. It is not recorded whether any of the carucates of geldable arable had fallen out of cultivation; but it is mentioned at this date there were 16 acres of meadow, and underwood three furlongs and two in breadth; either of which may have previously been under cultivation.

Among other points of interest recorded of this time are, that the Abbot of Burton owned one of the mills, thirteen acres of meadow, and some land belonging to that the Earl of Chester had a fishery; and that two priests, Osmer and Godwin, possessed one bovate of land each. At Martinmas the burgesses were accustomed to render to the King 12 thraves of corn, of which the Abbot of Burton had three sheaves.

The Domesday account of Derby, taken into consideration with the other historical notices, furnishes us with some data for forming an estimate of the size of the Norman town. It is plain enough that, as one of the "Five Burghs," Derby was an important place, not merely in the Danelagh, but in the country generally. In the "Saxon Chronicle" it is described as a "fortress," when under the rule of the Danes. The mention of "gates" in Ethelfleda's assault, and of "walls" in the translation of the relics of St. Alkmund, confirm this, although it is hardly likely that the walls were otherwise than earthen mounds surmounted with wooden palisades and fronted by a ditch. Tradition asserts that besides these urban defences Derby was a castle, and this is fully corroborated by the names of certain fields which lay between the London and Siddals roads before that district was built up. It is still more proved by the actual mounds which Hutton traced between Cock-pit Hill and St. Peter's Street. The absence of any mention of it in Domesday Book proves that it does not count for much, but that it should find no place in subsequent history proves that it must have ceased to be a stronghold at an early date, probably before the Norman era. If so, it would consist, like the "walls" of the town, of great earth-works and palisades. When and by whom it was raised we can only conjecture, but the most reasonable conjecture is that fortress-building Ethelfleda constructed it after the fall of Derby, to hold the district in subjection.

A comparison of Derby with Nottingham (also a member of the "Five Burghs") at the time of the Confessor, is strikingly in favour of the former. Nottingham had 173 burgesses, paid to the King £18, and apparently possessed only one church, against the 243 burgesses, the £24, and the six churches of Derby. It is true that the Domesday Book speaks of a mint at Nottingham, but not at Derby; there must, however, have been one at this town, for coins of the reigns of Edward the Confessor, William the Conqueror, Henry I., and Stephen are known to numismatists.

The six churches furnish an indication of the size of the town in the Confessor's days. St. Alkmund's was at its northern extremity and St. Peter's at its southern, while its breadth from east to west is represented by Full Street and St. Werburgh's. So slight had been the growth of the town from this time to a century ago, that Hutton could write, "the town appears to have been as large a thousand years ago as now." It is likely enough, however, that Peter's, and the houses around it, were a detached portion of the borough, separated by the valley of the Markeaton Brook, or, as it is more usually termed, "The Brook," which, as recently as half-a-century ago, flowed uncovered along what are now called Victoria and Albert Streets. As the lower grounds fringing the brook and the river were subject to sudden floods, they would be avoided for building purposes until want of space raised the value of land. Even as late as a century ago there were scarcely any buildings at the riverside, and there are good proofs that much of the lowlands adjacent to the brook were not built upon at the Conquest. Shortly before the date of Domesday Book, the little priory of St. James was founded on the land lying between Sadlergate, the Corn Market, and the brook, and it is hardly likely that streets and houses were pulled down to make way for it. On the opposite side of the stream from this priory were, at the date of that book, 12 acres of meadow in Walwik strete (the Wardwick), which the King gave to Burton Abbey. Some further light is thrown upon the pre-Norman town by the positions of the ancient churches. Three of them—All Saints', St. Michael's, and St. Alkmund's—occupy the crest of the tongue of land between the river and the above brook; while St. Mary's was somewhere in St. Mary's Street, on the slope to the brook; and St. Werburgh's is close to its side. Around these the houses would cluster; the ancient town would be densest on the summit of the tongue; one portion of it would straggle down to the brook, and even across it, in the vicinity of St. Werburgh's; while St. Peter's and the Castle would form an island apart. In Danelagh times it is probable that the town was confined to the summit, St. Werburgh's and St. Peter's representing later growths.

NORMAN DERBY.

As soon as the Norman rule was firmly established, an internal peace and prosperity was secured for the country such as it never before enjoyed. "It was such," states the Saxon Chronicle, "that a man . . . might go over the kingdom unhurt with his bosom full of gold." This security was followed by increase of trade, both within the country, and externally, with the Continent. With this a new complexion came over town life. Hitherto agriculture had dominated over trade and industry in the towns; but with the change they were gradually transformed into centres of enterprise and wealth, their citizens highly valuing their liberties, and ever on the alert to acquire new privileges.

The origin of the various liberties which all ancient boroughs, worthy to be called such, possessed, is lost in the twilight of history. But with Henry I. commenced the long series of municipal charters which shed so abundant a light on the constitution of mediæval cities and towns. Henry I., and John, as Earl of Derby, before he ascended the Throne, both probably granted charters to the burgesses of Derby. Henry II., and John in the first year of his reign, certainly did so, the townspeople paying, in the latter case, £66 for this confirmation of their liberties. Up to this point neither originals nor transcripts of the municipal charters remain, so that we have no exact knowledge of their contents. It is probable that they were essentially confirmations of rights and customs which the burgesses had enjoyed time out of mind, that is by prescription.

The burgesses, however, do not appear to have been satisfied with their position as set forth in King John's charter, for five years later they paid 66 marks and two palfreys for a new one corresponding to that of Nottingham. As Earl of Nottingham, he had granted that town several important privileges, and had confirmed them at his accession. A transcript of this new Derby charter is fortunately in existence. It opens by confirming to the burgesses of Derby all those free customs which the "mother-town" of Nottingham possessed in the times of Henry I. and II. These customs were the ordinary rights of a borough which had powers to hold fairs and markets, without which the business of such fairs and markets could not proceed, as "Thol and Theam, and Infangenethef, and Thelonia, from Dunsbrig to the Bridge of Cordi, and from the Bridge of Cordi to the Bridge of Estweit, as they were accustomed to have from all crossing the Derwent as fully as in the Borough of Derby." "Thol, in its original sense, probably comprised the jurisdiction of the market folks, their power to determine all questions relative to price, forestalling markets, and as to the rights of persons to buy and sell, and generally to their conduct and order; whilst Theam was the jurisdiction to determine disputes between the market people themselves, and their customs. Witnesses were produced who vouched to warranty—that is, testified to the truth or falsehood of a disputed sale. Infangenethef was the criminal procedure; the determination of questions of cheating and thefts within the market; and Thelonia is clearly the jurisdiction as to taking and exacting tolls.”—(Pym Yeatman.) Dunsbrig is Dovebridge, or as now more usually called, Doveridge. The identity of the other two bridges is uncertain; but probably Swarkeston bridge is one of them. The two market days are specified as Wednesday and Friday. In addition to these market rights, Derby also possessed the following privileges,—a monopoly of dyeing cloth within a radius of 10 leuca (a leuca was a trifle less than two miles); the freedom from all service, save that of the lord king, of the stranger who resided within the town, under certain conditions, for a year and a day; the legal title against all claimants, of the purchaser being a burgess, who held undisputed possession of land for a like term, providing the claimant was in England during this time; residents, other than burgesses, to contribute to the rates; traders coming to the market to be free from all arrest except for the king's dues; and two perches of the mid-stream of the Derwent were to be free to navigation. These are followed by the grants of this king, three highly important liberties—landmarks in the municipal history. The chief was the grant of the borough, with all its appurtenances, to the burgesses, at fee farm. This conferred a much larger share of self-government than had been previously enjoyed; for whereas the king's dues were formerly collected by a provost or bailiff appointed by the king himself, or by the baron to whom was granted the “third penny,” the collection was now vested in the burgesses themselves, to hold “by ancient ferm,”* and “all services and demands” (such as the payment of aids) were commuted into an annual rent of £10. To give proper effect to this, they were to appoint annually a reeve or a bailiff who was to answer on their behalf, and to pay the farm into the royal exchequer, one half at Easter and the other at Michaelmas. The other privileges were the possession of that formidable mediæval controller of trade, a merchant guild or house, “with all the liberties and free customs” which usually belong thereto; and exemptions from toll throughout the kingdom.

In the next reign a confirmation of their liberties cost them 70 marks, and the additional privileges of issuing writs for the recovery of debts and choosing their own coroner, 60 marks besides; while for the luxury of having no Jew within their bounds they parted with another ten. That the burgesses were not always prompt in the fulfilment of their duty to the king is plain from a “Pip Roll” of 1272, which states that “the men of Derby were fined five marks because they did not appear at the Exchequer by any bailiff at the Sheriff's computation;” and sixteen years later, for the same offence, their charter right were suspended until they paid 40 marks for their renewal. At the commencement of Edward III.'s reign, the bailiffs—for there were two now—and burgesses had their liberties again confirmed; no doubt, for a consideration. Nevertheless several years later (1330) they were formally summoned to show by what right they enjoyed them. They produced their various charters, and after a mulct of 40 marks were allowed to resume their own. Henry VI., Edward IV., and Richard III. each confirmed these charters.

Lights from other sources supply us with

FURTHER GLIMPSES OF PLANTAGENET DERBY.

During the wars of the reign of Henry III., the great ones of the land had

*The desire to have the “ferm” of the town was not new to the burgesses, for nearly half a century previous they paid 40 marks in order that William Asteari “should not have the town (i.e., to farm), and for many years they continued to farm it.”—(Pipe Rolls.) The above charter made this a permanent right.

illegally taken to themselves all sorts of rights, to the diminishment of the revenues of the Crown and the welfare of the people; but one of the first acts of Edward I., the "Justinian of England," was to set matters right. He sent forth commissioners into all the land—Derby included—to make enquiries; and the result of these "inquisitions" was the "Statute of Gloucester."

Derby was visited in 1275, and we learn from the inquisition that all sorts of encroachments had been made by the neighbouring lords and others, for a long time back, to the injury of the king and his loyal subjects. Somebody had dared for seven years past to incommode the king's highway by the erection of a porch twelve feet long by six wide. Jordan Fullo was a greater nuisance still, for his cesspool had offended the olfactory organs of peace-loving wayfarers for five years. The vicar of St. Peter's, Dan Robert de Hylton, had, the last five years, put in a claim for a slice on the wayside, which rightfully, so the jury affirmed, belonged to the king. If the shepherds of the flock set so bad an example, no wonder that John le Corner should have gone to the length of positively appropriating another slice! A gentleman of high standing, Ralph fitz Ranulph, had caused much offence by building a wall—why, is not stated; and the baronial owner of Ilkeston, and of Greasley in Nottinghamshire, had, so far back as 30 years, erected two houses too near the highway; while the gables of Thomas Rennaway, Thomas de Toneworth, and William de Juvenis, were to the "hurt" of all respectable passengers.

But, bad as were the peccadillos of these secular folk, those of the ecclesiastical dignitaries were worse. There was the Abbot of Darley! He was guilty of making a marl pit and ditch, to the peril of life and limb of the passengers on the king's highway, and, with the Bishop of Chester, had obstructed the passage of the Derwent by the erection of dams; while the ditch of the Master of St. Helen's House exceeded that of his lord, the abbot, by 40ft.

As implied in the Domesday Book, All Saints' was a collegiate church. From the time of Henry I. the dean and chapter of Lincoln were the patrons of its college, and St. Alkmund's Church was subject to it. In 1252 a warm dispute between its canons and the abbot of Darley, relative to tithes, which the former claimed from the latter, was settled by arbitration in favour of All Saints', the arbitrator being the Archdeacon of Berkshire. In 1322 St. Werburgh's Church was the scene of a sanguinary quarrel, for which Hugh de Meynell of Langley was held responsible.

The varied costumes of at least six religious houses lent picturesqueness to the streets at this period. There was, of course, the priory of St. James; and for the privilege of crossing its bridge the townsfolk rendered yearly (at the close of this period) 2lbs. of wax to the monks. A small Augustinian abbey, dedicated to St. Helen, was founded by Robert de Ferrers, the second Earl of Derby, in the reign of Stephen, but in the following reign Hugh, dean of the college of All Saints', gave his lands at Darley to this institution, and shortly after the convent removed thither. Thus began the wealthy Abbey of Darley, which owned many a broad acre in Derby. St. Helen's lived on as a hospital for poor men and women, in dependence upon Darley. An early abbot of Darley founded a small Benedictine nunnery on the King's Mead,* about half a mile north-west of the town, dedicated to St. Mary. The abbots of Darley exercised unusual rights over this house, which led to various disputes, until at length, about the middle of the 13th century, the bishop of the diocese declared its complete independence. This priory possessed so priceless a treasure as part of the shirt of Thomas à Becket. Another small hospital was dependent on Darley—one for lepers, dedicated to St. Leonard. Its exact whereabouts is uncertain. Tradition points to the vicinity of the present Leonard Street (a modern street-name suggested by the tradition), while another connects it with St. Leonard's Flatt, a field near our Crompton Street. In the vicinity of Friar Gate was the house of the Dominican friars, founded about 1292, and dedicated to St. Mary.

* Whence our King's Mead Ward.

Some idea of the size of the town in the Plantagenet period may be got from a poll-tax assessment of 1377. According to it, 1,076 lay persons of fourteen years of age, and exclusive of paupers, were taxed. This probably presents a population of 2,000. Sundry pavages (rates for paving) in street improvements. Fairs were held on the Tuesday and Wednesday in week, and another for sixteen days at the feast of St. James, while markets were held on Sundays, Mondays, Tuesdays, and Fridays, and the borough gaol.

As already observed in connection with King John's second charter, like most other towns of the time, possessed

A MERCHANT GILD.

The gilds varied in the different towns, but they all agreed in being so formed for the express purpose "of obtaining and maintaining the privilege of carrying on trade, a privilege which implied the possession of the monopoly of trade in each town by the gild brethren as against the other inhabitants, and also the liberty of trade in other towns." The members paid various fees, which were spent for the common purposes of the gild, especially in festivities, and were subject to various regulations and punishments in the event of their breach, drawn up at the "ordinances" of the society. Considerable light is thrown on the Derby gild by the pleadings of Quo Warranto of 1330. The Crown attorney, in questioning the liberties of the burgesses, remarked that some of the burgesses were united in a gild, and that others were not; that under cover of the gild the former went to oppress those who came to sell wares in the town, so that none could sell except to a member of the gild, and this at the pleasure of the said gild, and not only so, the vendor was obliged to sell by wholesale, so that the profit arising therefrom did not accrue to the advantage of the town generally, but to the gildsmen; that by reason of the gild no "foreign" (i.e., outside) merchant could purchase by wholesale wine, wool, wool-fells, leather, or lead, from the town, and that if anyone brought neat's leather, wool, or wool-fell into the town, and one of the gildsmen put his foot upon it and stated the price he was willing to pay for it, no one but a member of the gild dared to buy it, nor could the owner dare to sell it to a non-member, nor for a higher price than that which the member offered. How strikingly the mediæval theory and method of buying and selling contrasted with the present we leave to the reader's imagination. The merchant gilds were gradually replaced by craft gilds, and these, in the 17th and 18th centuries, were organized into the "companies" of the 17th and 18th centuries. It is known of the Derby craft gilds; but the Derby Company of Mercers was not noticed in due course.

Although an era of great national importance, the records of

are decidedly meagre and insignificant. That era, however, has left one landmark in the town—the tower of All Saints' Church, which Hutton calls it as "the chief excellence, the pride of the place," and which, compared with the rest of the buildings of the town, is as truly now as when he wrote "a giant among subjects, a giant among dwarfs." This noble tower, one of the best examples of late Perpendicular in the country, was commenced about the middle of Henry VII.'s reign, and was slowly raised during the following twenty years. The cost of its erection was, to a large extent, defrayed by Church rates levied in various parts of the country, but no small portion of the expense must have been borne by the youth of both sexes, for tradition thus explains the quotation of Psalms cxlviii., "young men and maidens," twice repeated on the course near the base. Robert Liversage, the benevolent and wealthy dyer, was a liberal contributor to the erection of this tower, granting various tenements the vicar of St. Peter's and seven others, in 1529, on condition that the rents should be devoted to certain pious works. This estate has now become not only the most important charity in the town, but one of the most important in the country.

The great national event of the era was the harsh and tyrannical suppression of the religious houses, which took effect in Derby as elsewhere. To judge from the inventories of the revenues of these establishments, then drawn up, those of this town were of little value or importance. The yearly incomes of the Friary and St. Mary's de Pratis were each but little more than £18, while that of St. James' Priory was under £12, and St. Helen's, apparently, had ceased to exist. In the next reign, Edward VI., the much wealthier college of All Saints' was dissolved and stripped of its endowments. This collegiate church was of "imposing size, most richly furnished with all the ornaments of worship, served by a large college of priests and chantry chaplains, and chosen by the bishop for ordinations and other important functions," and was "regarded somewhat in the light of a minster for all Derbyshire" (Cox). But the suppression left no provision for the spiritual needs, not only of its own populous parish, but also of that of St. Alkmund's, which was dependent upon it. Queen Mary, however, repaired the mischief so far as she could, by a lengthy grant of lands, &c., of the annual value of over £77, to the burgesses, on condition that they found priests for the above two churches, and a master and usher for the Free School. These grants consisted of such properties of the above college and local religious houses as remained in the hands of the Crown at her accession. This reign, however, was marked by at least one local repetition of the doleful fires of Smithfield. In 1556, the year of the martyrdom of Cranmer, Ridley, and Latimer, "a certaine poor, honest, godlie woman," blind from her birth, named Joan Waste, was burned for her faith in Windmill Pit, on the south-west side of the town, where it was customary, in later times at least, to burn female malefactors. She was a regular attendant of All Saints' Church, and her chief offence was the denial of the doctrine of transubstantiation.

Derbyshire had always been united to Nottinghamshire in matters judicial, having one sheriff for the two, and the common prison for felons at Nottingham. But in 1566 Derbyshire had a separate sheriff, and this necessitated a common jail for the county, at Derby. It was erected over the brook at the foot of the Corn Market. We shall have occasion to refer to this damp fever den again.

In 1585 poor Mary of Scots, whose ill-treatment from her cousin Elizabeth is another stain on English annals, stayed a night in the town on her way from Wingfield Manor to Tutbury Castle. The house she lodged in was Babington Hall, a long-since destroyed mansion, situated near the north-east corner of Babington Lane with St. Peter's Street, then occupied by a widowed lady, Mrs. Beaumont. Mary, upon entering the hall of the mansion, kissed her hostess, and with that fascinating urbanity for which she was unrivalled, assured her that she would put her to no trouble, and that she likewise was a widow, hence able to sympathise with her. That night a gentleman porter guarded the chief entrance, and watches were placed in the Market Place and other points of the town, while eight more paced St. Peter's Street. Little thought Mary when in this ancient house of the Babingtons, that in less than three years she would end her career on the block of Fotheringay through the chivalric but ill-advised conspiracy of a member of that family.

It is satisfactory to find that Derby was so far to the front in rendering voluntary pecuniary aid for the national defence against the Spanish Armada, that no less than three of its tradesmen—two butchers and a draper—patriotically parted with the then large sum of £25 each. But while that Armada was being heroically resisted, Derby annals were being stained by the disgusting execution—hanging, drawing, and quartering—of three wretched men, Garlick, Ludlam, and Simpson, whose only or chief offence was that of being Roman Catholic priests; and 37 other recusants were sickening in the noisome atmosphere of the county prison. Like most other towns, Derby was occasionally ravaged by that baue of mediæval times—the Plague. In 1592-3, it spread to such an extent that the All Saints' parish (in which it commenced) "there were not two houses free from it."

It is well known that in olden times only those clergymen were allowed to preach who were licensed to do so. Others had to content themselves with the reading of homilies. In 1602-3, there were only two licensed preachers in Derby—Bennet of All Saints', and Swetnam of St. Alkmund's.

Stuart Derby is more interesting than that of the previous period. The early years of James I. were marked by an unseemly squabble over the rights of common on certain lands belonging to the borough. The burgesses claimed these rights; but they certainly got the worst of it at first, for, in 1604, four of them were committed to jail in consequence of the active part they took in the agitation. How the affair was ultimately settled, we cannot say.

Speed's neatly engraved map of "Darbye," furnishes a picturesque in 1610. It presents a bird's eye view rather than a plan; a network of rows of pigmy close-packed houses, the zig-zag lines of their steep points looking like the edges of so many saws. Obviously, Stuart Derby was no more than a large village-town only. Bridge Gate was its northern limit, Babington Lane its southern. The Derwent, as might be expected, formed its eastern boundary, but the houses by no means reached the river; while Willow Row and the Friary was a spacious and open green—Nuns Green, the common land of the burgesses.

Approaching the town by the Duffield road, the first houses that truly said to belong to Derby were a group of three, ranged round a yard to the road,—an old-fashioned inn arrangement which, with little difference, still presents "Old Seven Stars," upon the same site, perpetuates. This passage through fields again stretched away to the right; and further away, in the gentle watered hollow beyond, was Nuns Green; then followed more houses, then a turn of a footpath to the green,—these upon the site of the religious house of St. Helen's—with the entrance to Bridge Gate on the opposite side of the river. Where King Street wheeled to the left, the houses on both sides thickened. Arrived at the head of Queen Street, the little church of St. Mary's picturesquely formed the background of a house-girt graveyard, as at present. Expressive and well-proportioned was its 15th-century tower, and the elements that crested clear-story and aisle, gave, as they always give, a certain quaintness to the body. No paths are shown round or through the church, but doubtless they existed as in after times.

Exploring Bridge Gate before turning town-wards, we would have found it solidly lined with houses, as at present. St. Mary's Bridge is shown with three arches, but probably it had nine: it was steep, narrow, and lofty. The "stone chappell" of St. Mary is briefly mentioned by Speed as standing at the town end of it.* The view from the bridge must have been very picturesque before it was blocked with mills and founderies. To the left, the Derwent meandered through the pastures, with the houses of Little Chester in the distance. Between the trees that skirted the Breadsall and Nottingham roads, in front, could be caught glimpses of the pleasant meadows of Chaddesley. Looking down the river—all to its left—was open country, while on the right side were the picturesque gables of Derby, and the queenly tower of St. Mary overlooking all. A few hundred yards below the bridge was the "Cresswell" foot-bridge constructed of flagstones upon the crest of the weir which turned back the water to work St. Michael's Mill. Beyond the mill lay the island which separated the mill-fleet from the main stream, and upon which, at a later time, was erected the Old Silk Mill. Right away, until the river out of sight to the left, gardens on the right side reached to the water's edge. You could cross the "Causey" to the mill, whence another bridge led to St. Michael's Lane and Queen Street.

St. Michael's was a puny church, and Walker Lane was only partially built upon on the left side. St. Mary's Gate, as at present, was thronged with houses, but it lacked the County Hall. All Saints' tower, as now, was the most conspicuous object in Derby; the church, too, was large and noble, though somewhat irregular through the addition at various times of chantry-chapels. Within there was a goodly show of monuments (now, alas! mostly gone), the most gorgeous being in the south east chapel, to the memory of the famous "Bess of Hardwick" (then recently dead), who had it prepared in her lifetime. Behind the church, in Full Street, were some almshouses which she founded eleven years before our date. They are shown on the map as of two storeys, with three gables, and larger than any other houses in the town,—perhaps to indicate the fame of their foundress. Irongate was narrow and dark.

The Market Place would, indeed, to us, have been a terra incognita. Around it were houses and shops of all sorts, those of aldermanic mercers intermixed with those of traders of small degree, and hostelryes. The houses were narrow, lofty, and over-hanging; framed with stout oak beams, and panelled with plaster-faced "wattle-and-daub," pargeted, in the best houses. The lofty gables faced the street, and were frequently embellished with elaborate barge-boards. The high-pitched roofs were tiled or thatched. Windows, wider than high, mullioned with oak, and filled in with small diamond panes, dimly admitted the daylight. The basements varied very much, but they were usually of brick or stone: sometimes they contained a darkish half-cellar apartment only, the room where trade was conducted being on the first floor. More often the basement was the shop, and the window was by no means always glazed: a counter formed the sill, while the goods were exposed above. Signs, such as we are familiar with, were absent: but every shop exhibited a fanciful device, like those of modern inns, or some well known badge by which the nature of its wares were known, as the barber-surgeon's pole, and the pawnbroker's three gold balls. These signs were not placed flat to the walls, but upon projecting poles, which added greatly to the picturesqueness of the scene.

On the west the square was bounded by an isolated range of buildings, known afterwards, and probably then, as The Shambles. The reader perhaps remembers the narrow street—the Rotten Row—between this block and the line of buildings that forms the present west side. Near the centre of the open space was the Market Cross. Between it and the entrance to Full Street was the Conduit, fed then, perhaps, as at a later date, by a pipe from Becket Well. On the other side of the Cross was the Town Hall, also standing free in the open space. It was an old-fashioned half-timbered structure, the basement serving as the town gaol. The disposition of the Town Hall with the Shambles left a large open space west of the former: this was the Corn Market. In it, two lofty posts are shown on the map. It has been suggested that they were May-poles; more likely they were set up to indicate where the different sorts of grain were to be placed. There were such posts a century later in this market.

The Corn Market is, of course, now absorbed in the Market Place, and the street we know by the name was merely a prolongation of it. But what a contrast its lower end presented to what we see now! Over the brook, which still flows concealed, the county gaol had been erected about forty years previously. It stood as nearly as possible where the "Five Lamps"* now stand—wretched and pestilential, constructed as though (to use quaint Hutton's words) its originators were bent "upon drowning the culprit before they hanged him!" This was no far-fetched satire, for this very year (1610) three prisoners were drowned in its dungeon through a sudden rise in the brook. Sad memories clung to it: only twenty-two years previously the three Recusant martyrs,

* The "Five Lamps" were removed about a year ago; and an electric lamp substituted.

Garlick, Ludlam, and Simpson, were led forth through its gloomy portals hanged, drawn, and quartered for their faith. St. Peter's Bridge, across the map, was on the east side of the gaol, and of three arches.

St. Peter's Street was habitually called "The Parish." Being on the skirts of the town, it was, as we might expect, a straggling half-built-upon. Where Albert Street is was open brook. Thorntree Lane had a few houses. "Parish" end.

Bag Lane (East Street), contained many houses, except where Albion now crosses it. That side of St. Peter's Street was fully built upon, opposite was very irregular, having a large yard or court open to the street surrounded with straggling houses or cottages. St. Peter's Church and Grammar School behind it had much their present appearance. Just beyond church, and at the turn into Babington Lane, was the handsome gate Babington Hall, its front emblazoned with the arms of that ancient and noble family. The old hall, where Mary Queen of Scots stayed, stood towards our Gower Street—a handsome building, its rooms wainscotted and carved with rebuses upon the family name and other quaint devices.

Several houses lined the "Parish" beyond Babington Lane, upon the old mansion now known as Babington House, which was built a few years later. A few houses stood at the junction of the Osmaston and London roads, and the houses of the east side of St. Peter's Street extended a short way down the latter road. All beyond was the open country, Castle Fields excepted, from the London road to Siddals Lane, and to indicate their rural condition horses are shown grazing in them.

At the top end of Bag Lane was the Morledge, a broad expanse dotted with houses. Along its centre ran a tributary brook, crossed in one place by a bridge. The Cockpit, at its southern end, was constructed on a hill known as Castle Hill, doubtless the Saxon burh of the ancient castle. The cockpit seems to have been covered with a six or eight-sided building and contained a few houses stood at the foot of the hill towards the Siddals, and all beyond to the south and east stretched a fertile and rural country. Retracing our way towards the Market Place—at what is now the end of Albert Street, Tenant Bridge (of three arches apparently), but the street itself was regarded as part of the Morledge. The fine old timber-framed house behind Mrs. C. was, of course, then standing, and gives a good idea of the better-class residences of a century previously.

We will now return to Babington Lane. Where now stand the Corporation offices in Gower Street was a row of houses. Green Lane, as might be expected, was quite rural, except for a few houses at the town corner of Macklin's Lane, then, or at least subsequently, called "Cross Lane." This tree-shaded lane ending in a brook-side walk—now Monk Street—which led to an isolated group of cottages, the "Abbey Barns," behind which you could have proceeded to Burton road, by what was afterwards Spa Lane. If at the end of Cross Lane the right-hand turn was taken instead, this would have led us by the Curzon Street, then with two or three houses on each side, to St. Werburgh's Church, crossing, near the end of Newland Street, the Odd Brook by a bridge. This brooklet (the Bramble Brook of later times) came from beyond Uttoxeter Old Road, and the walk along its bank was, or at all events was, known as Dog Kennel Lane.

Victoria Street was another brook-side way, reached from Cross Lane by Green and Becket-well Lanes. Its south side was lined with houses, and James's Lane—more an alley than a lane—was reached by a bridge; and over the Odd Brook, which here joined the main stream, had to be crossed to reach the Wardwick, which, as at present, was built upon on both sides of the brook. A handsome house at the corner of, and which formerly extended across the street, was not as yet erected, not being commenced until the following year; it gives a good idea of the best residences of this period. The town of Werburgh's we would have instantly recognised, although it was then but the old tower, surmounted with a spire, having fallen in a terrible gale in 1601. We cannot say what the old church, standing in 1610, was like, but it occupied the same site as the present one.

In Friar Gate the houses extended loosely considerably beyond the present Stafford Street. The Friary was a large gabled mansion, standing further back from the road than the present house. It seems to have been surrounded by a lofty wall, with an arched entrance. The houses on the right-hand side ended at about our Ford Street. Beyond them was the pleasant green already referred to—Nuns Green—through which Markeaton Brook meandered, containing a cross, the Town Pinfold, and at the far end a flour mill and the remains of the Nunnery of St. Mary de Pratis, that gave name to the green. Three bridges spanned the brook. A walk across the green was undoubtedly very pleasant, and on the opposite side was a sunny row of houses, now, alas! the dingy Willow Row surrounded by a network of streets and factories. Following up Bold Lane and Sadlergate, narrow as they are now, to the Market Place, would have completed our survey of Derby when James I. was king.

In the year following Speed's map (1611) the burgesses obtained which confirmed their old liberties and invested them with several more. The Corporation was now made to consist of two bailiffs, who were to be justices of the peace during their year of office and the year following, twenty-four brethren, a recorder, town clerk, chamberlain, and other officers. It was empowered to hold a court of record every second Tuesday; to have the sole return of writs; to keep quarterly sessions, two court-leets, six annual fairs, and to be toll free throughout the kingdom. No stranger was to carry on trade in the borough except at markets and fairs; but should he be allowed to carry on a trade for a year and a day, he was entitled to become a freeman. This charter was improved by another granted by Charles I., in 1637, which made the body corporate to consist of a mayor, nine aldermen, fourteen brethren, and fourteen capital burgesses. The first mayor was Henry Mellor, a substantial mercer of the town, and sprung of an old Idridgehay family.

For centuries Derby does not seem to have been graced with the presence of sovereignty; but in 1624 James I. and Prince Charles stayed in the town for two nights. The latter, when king, made several visits, but local historians have muddled them up until it is difficult to say how many times he came. He was expected in 1633, but for some reason was prevented from coming. He certainly came in the summer of 1636; and Simpson and other local writers state that this was on the occasion of his return from his unsatisfactory negotiations with the Scotch Covenanters at Ripon, and that the Corporation entertained him, presenting the Earl of Newcastle with a purse of gold, and the Elector Palatine with twenty broad pieces.* This is obviously a mistake, as the Ripon episode took place in 1640. Still, these statements point to a visit which must have happened about the latter date. The last visit was at the outbreak of the civil war in 1642. The king had set up his standard on the Castle Hill of Nottingham, and was on his way to Shrewsbury. In passing through Derby the Corporation swelled the proceeds of the pawning of the royal jewels and the melting down of cavalier plate by the loan of £300, besides the gift of all the small arms they could furnish. While the king was at Nottingham, twenty Derby men flocked to his standard; but the loyalty of the town was short-lived: throughout the rest of the war it showed a decided leaning towards the Parliamentary cause.

DERBY AND THE CIVIL WAR.

Within a few weeks of the last visit of this unfortunate king, Sir John Gell, a member of an old family long resident at Hopton-in-the-Peak, garrisoned the

*"The date given by Hutton and other local writers for this visit—1635—is obviously wrong, for in the first register of All Saints' is an entry for August 15, 1636, recording the burial of the king's baker, "who Came with his Ma^{tie} one his progresse to this towne, and dyed heare of a spotted fever."

DERBY UNDER THE COMMONWEALTH

seems to have remained tolerably tranquil. Presbyterianism had completely replaced Anglican Episcopacy in Derbyshire, and Derby was the meeting place for the "Classics" (the assembly of delegates from the parochial congregations usually held monthly) of the hundred of Morleston and Litchurch. George Fox, the founder of the Society of Friends, visited the town several times. On one of these occasions he interrupted and harangued the congregation of one of the churches, and this promptly brought him before the justices. Bidding them to tremble at the name of the Lord, Justice Bennet retorted by calling him and his Quakers, a name by which his followers were very soon universally designated. For this offence he was committed to the local house of correction for six months. During this time he brought under his influence a company of soldiers, and as his term of imprisonment was nearly concluded the Parliamentary Commissioners offered him the captaincy of this company, whether in earnest or joke is not clear. Fox, however, refused the offer, and the vehemence of this testimony against the lawfulness of bearing him arms, brought him another six months, this time in the common gaol, "amongst thirty felons in a close stinking place." Derby has also the notoriety of being the first place where a female Quaker preached.

Meanwhile a native of Derby, Rev. John Cotton, was drawing towards the close of a holy and useful career at Boston, in New England. Born in 1585; a fellow, and then head lecturer, dean, and catechist of Emmanuel College, he was chosen minister of Boston, Lincolnshire, where his piety and learning made him highly esteemed by the townspeople. There he became a Nonconformist; and the persecution this brought him led him at length, in 1633, to emigrate to New England, where he became minister of the first church in Boston. Boston at that time was known as Trimountain, but out of respect to him it was named after the English scene of his ministry.

During the short protectorate of Richard Cromwell, Sir George Booth's memorial in favour of Charles II. was read in the Market Place, and met with a favourable response from the townspeople and local troops. But when, a few days later, this northern insurrection was crushed at Nantwich, the local insurgents rapidly dispersed without a blow.

DERBY UNDER THE RESTORATION AND REVOLUTION.

How the townsfolk accepted the restoration of the monarchy is uncertain. Two circumstances seem to indicate that they, like the rest of the country, hailed it with satisfaction. A new mace, conspicuously decorated with the insignia of royalty (the one in present use) was made. Previously, the two which belonged to the two bailiffs, were borne before the Mayor. It is almost beyond a doubt that the Restoration mace was made out of these. The other indication of the monarchical reaction was the choice, in the following year, 1661, of the staunch Royalist, Mr., afterwards Sir Simon, Degge, as recorder of the borough. This gentleman, who long afterwards was one of the wealthiest and most influential of the residents of the town, was a native of Staffordshire, and had suffered imprisonment in the King's cause. He was justice of the Welsh Marches in 1662; knighted in 1669; and High Sheriff of Derbyshire in 1673. His chief work was The Parson's Counsellor and Law of Tithes, which he had the felicity to see through six editions, and which long after his death was the leading text book on the subject. According to Hutton and Simpson, he lived at Babington Hall; and when Woolley wrote, in 1712, this old mansion was the residence of his descendants.

Hutton has a story about this gentleman, which, although frequently quoted, will well bear repeating. A certain Noah Bullock of this town, who had three sons (Shem, Ham, and Japhet),* "built an ark, and launched it upon the

* The names of the sons are entered in the registers of St. Peter's Church, as respectively baptized in the years 1670, 1672, and 1681.

Derwent." Here they "enjoyed their abode, and the world their laugh." This, however, the analogy to the first navigator ends; for Bullock made an ingenious retreat to coin false money. Sir Simon Degge, suspecting this, told him, and told him that "he had taken up a new occupation, and desired to see a specimen of his work." Naturally, Bullock hesitated; and upon the man promising that no evil should come to him, provided he relinquished the trade, he pulled out a sixpence, and told Sir Simon that he could make as good a use of it that. "The knight smiled; Noah withdrew, broke up his ark, and escaped." "The knight smiled; Noah withdrew, broke up his ark, and escaped."

In 1662 a cyclone swept across the south part of the town, unroofing and uprooting trees. That horrible sentence to those who obstinately refused to plead—Pressing to Death—was carried out, perhaps for the last time in England at the Old Shire Hall, on the person of a woman, in 1665. It has long been regarded as a cardinal point of local history that the town was devastated by the Plague which laid London low in 1665. Hutton appears to be the first to mention such a visitation in that year, and his graphic description of it is well known. The total absence of corroborative evidence leads the writer to think that Hutton's authority was oral tradition only, and that the story relates to a visitation of the Plague in 1645-7, which was so bad that the assizes had to be held in the Friar's Close. The church registers of Derby give no indication of any abnormal death-rate. Hutton's statement that "the inhabitants were buried in the top of Nuns Green . . . what bore the name of the Headless Cross, consisting of about four quadrangular steps, covered in the centre with a stone," whereon to place a vessel of vinegar to receive the purchasers' money, is obviously incorrect. To erect so massive a sub-structure for this purpose would be a waste of labour and material; but to call it a headless cross would be manifest absurdity. The designation implies that it once bore a cross, and lost it. The great stone is now in the Arboretum, and a very slight inspection will convince the reader that it is the base of a market cross (the upper part of the Friar Gate has long been used for certain fairs), and, in all probability, the "Hedles Cros" mentioned in a list of lands belonging to All Saints' Church in 1483.

This local plague of 1645-7 introduces us to a name that Derby has long been proud of, that of John Flamsteed, the first Astronomer Royal. He was born at Denby, near this town, in 1646, whither his parents had removed for a few weeks during the hot summer weather in consequence of this visitation. He received the rudiments of a good education in the Derby Grammar School. His studious habits turned the leisure, which his early ill-health provided him with, to good account. He eagerly studied mathematics and astronomy, and, before long, had reached such eminence, that when the Greenwich Observatory was founded, he was appointed to the new post of Astronomer Royal. He was a voluminous writer, but his great work was "Historia Cœlestis," which was published twenty years after his death.

The agitation to exclude the Romanist Duke of York from the succession to the Throne reached an acute stage in 1681. An Exclusion Bill was passed by the Houses of Commons, which in consequence were hastily dissolved. The Protestant party—Whigs as they were now called—despaired of accomplishing their design by Parliamentary means, and the country was on the brink of civil war. Articles, purporting to relate to an association which had for its object the exclusion of York, were discovered, and were said to have been drawn up by the Earl of Shaftesbury, a Protestant leader; but the bill of indictment against the Earl was thrown out by the grand jury of Middlesex. As a protest against this action, the grand juries throughout the country were called upon to show their loyalty by addresses to the King, declarative of their abhorrence of the association. The Derbyshire grand jury responded to this request at the Derby Assizes. Following, their address expressing their "amazement as well as detestation of the association, "which could have no less intendment" than the destruction of his "royall Majestie, his lawful successors, and the very monarchy nation." This expression of their loyalty signed, a copy of the association was burnt in the Market Place.

Failing a suppliant Parliament the King now resorted to the dangerous expedient of ruling without one, relying on the liberality of his subjects for supplies. One of the expedients that corporations had recourse to, in order to express their attachment to the court, was the surrender of their charters under pretence of obtaining new immunities. Those of Derby were thus surrendered, and in return, at the cost of about £400, the borough received a new charter which did little more than restate all the old liberties in a very verbose and roundabout way. This servile loyalty—so great a contrast to the sturdiness with which Derby stood out for the people's rights at a later date—lived on to the Revolution. When the Earl of Devonshire, after the secret conference at the famous "Cock and Pynot," at Whittington, near Chesterfield, moved southward with a large retinue to welcome the Prince of Orange, and declared en route, in the Derby Market Place, the objects of the revolutionary movement—the defence of the Protestant religion, the laws, and the rights and liberties of the people—the inhabitants held aloof; and a little later the Mayor refused to billet a detachment of his troops.

In spite of the advantage that immediately followed the Revolution, Derby clung to its Jacobite proclivities long afterwards. In 1709, the fascinating Dr. Sacheverel preached his famous sermons at All Saints' and at St. Paul's Cathedral, replete with High Church principles and insinuations against the work of 1688. Then followed his famous trial, in which his light sentence was esteemed a triumph for the Tories and High Church party, and Derby declared its sympathy with blazing bonfires and clanging bells.

A valuable contribution by Mr. H. Arnold-Bemrose on to the Journal of the Deryshire Archæological and Natural History Society, a few years ago, gives a most interesting insight into the trade of the town in the second half of the 17th century. The mediæval merchant gild was in most towns replaced by craft gilds, and those in their turn were organised into a single society in the 17th century. In its grant, dated 1674, the Corporation, following the "laudable practice and precedent of the City of London, and divers other Cities, Boroughs, and Corporations within this Realme," constituted "the Mercers, Apothecaries, Grocers, Ironmongers, Upholsters, and Milliners of this Borough into a Company . . . to be Governed, Inspected, and Regulated by a Steward, two Wardens, and tenn Brothers." It gave this company authority "to make orders, & By lawes, for the good Government & Regulation of the said trades & tradesmen aforesaid, hereby reduced into one Company . . . soe as the same be not repugnant or contrary to the Lawes of this Kingdome, nor any of the Customes, Priveledges & Rights of the said Borough of Derby." It ordained that all who followed these trades within the borough should observe the orders of the company, and that the names of their apprentices should be entered in its register, and that their term of seven years' service should commence with the date of the entry. It authorised the stewards and wardens to enter shops and warehouses to test the weights, measures, and goods; to tax the members according to their stock and trade for expenses incurred in prosecutions and other legal proceedings, having in view the "maynetayeneinge of the lyberties, freedomes, & customes of the aforesaid Borough, & of their respective trades," and to levy by distress if the tax be not paid. No person who had not served a full and due apprenticeship to a member of the company was to become a freeman without the consent of the company; and anyone other than a freeman, who carried on any of the specified trades in the town, was to forfeit £5 to the company for each month that he so offended. The apprentice out of his time was to have the approbation of the company before he could "keepe open shopp" in the town; this obtained, he was to enter into a bond of £10 "faithfully & truely to perform & keepe all & every of these Ordinances & Orders;" he was then to be presented to the Mayor and burgesses "to bee sworne a Burgess of the Corporation."

The brothers were to be appointed for life. The steward and wardens to be selected by the brethren, out of their number, each Easter Tuesday, for a year. The steward was to have power to summon and dissolve meetings, appoint a registrar "for enteringe and recordinge of all orders, Bylawes degrees, made in such assemblies," and a beadle, "for the summoninge of meetings and assemblies," and attending at the same. Members were to "keepe the counsell of the said Company . . . and not to Disclo same to any other not beinge of the same Company," and "to duely respectively Carry and behave" themselves towards the Mayor and Corporation.

The company was entirely distinct from the Corporation, and the fines and compositions were for its sole use. Membership, or freedom of company, was distinct from the freedom of the borough; but in the case of apprentices, the former was a qualification for the latter, for when they made free by the company, they could take their burgess oath. From the minutes we learn that monthly meetings were ordered, and that these were chiefly held at inns, the Angel and the George being the most frequently resorted to. For the first ten years the annual assembly was held at the Town Hall; afterwards at inns like the ordinary meetings. The officers wore gowns on public and public occasions. The wardens had custody of all fines, and were indebted "for their performance of all such Acts injoynd as they are in duty Bound." Sunday trading, except "in Case of necessitie," was prohibited, "upon paine forfeiting three shillings fourpence." There is no record that the company carried out their powers of inspecting weights and measures, and goods. The chief effort of the company seems to have been to prevent damage being done to the associated trades, by people opening shops without having served their apprenticeship in the borough, or having the freedom or the license of the company. An outsider could not carry on one of these trades, even if he was a freewoman engaged in the same trade, without due license. Although the powers of the company were restricted to Derby, its officers seems to have exercised some sort of jurisdiction outside the borough, for in 1683 it was ordered that goods should be bought from shopkeepers at Etwall and Belper, "in case that legall informacons be given against them for exercising trades for which they have noe Right." Being always only a small society, the annual subscription was only two shillings a member did not amount to much; the chief source of income being from fines and compositions from traders who joined the company. As there was a large balance in hand it was frequently lent to an officer of the company, and he gave a bond for the amount. On one occasion (1692) £400 was lent to the Corporation "for the carrying on the water works for the town." These works were in St. Michael's Lane, and reference will shortly be made to them again to them. This sum was lent free of interest for three years. The Corporation must have been very poverty-stricken, for a large portion of it remained unpaid 19 years after, when, after threats of legal proceedings, £10 was handed to the company, leaving a balance of £10 still owing. The records of the company end abruptly in 1740, and probably it died out about that time, as most other companies of the country did in that century.

The principal trad

"that of Malting," and by it "many good Estates" had been raised; and Derby ale was in such repute, that much of it was sent to London and other parts to good advantage." It was "the storehouse for lead," which was brought on horses from Wirksworth and other places in the Peak; and "a considerable manufacture of Stockings was carried on." Since Speed had made his map, the town had scarcely expanded at all: Lodge Lane, "to the top of St. Peter's Parish," and the end of Friar Gate to the Cockpit or Castle Hill, represent its length and breadth in 1711. But if we could have traversed its streets at this date we should have met with many alterations. The low mullioned windows with diamond panes, the lofty gables and roofs, and the timber-groined construction of the earlier period, were giving place to sash windows with square panes, bold ornate cornices, and brick and stone construction. The last lingerings of the old Gothic in mould and window had disappeared from these new buildings, and the Renaissance reigned supreme, more stately, but less picturesque.

The Streets were identical in plan with those of 1610, for the age of widenings was not yet. Let us take an imaginary saunter through these streets, entering the town by the Duffield Road, as before, passing Lodge Lane, with its pleasant hedges and trees, the old inn, the knots of houses upon and around the site of the old religious house of St. Helen's; we enter Bridge Gate, the old tower of St. Alkmund's overlooking all, and its six tuneful bells clanging forth a merry peal. No constant preaching has been in this church of late, but it is to be hoped that things will alter now the living has been augmented by the sum of fifty pounds a year, left by the late Mr. Goodwin, a gentleman of this town. Just beyond the lane to Darley are the Wilmot Almshouses, a row of low, timber-framed, and thatched cottages. The bridge and lower end of the street remain much as they were in 1610; but the old chapel is divided into small tenements.

Reaching Queen Street by St. Alkmund's churchyard, we are informed that Walker Lane is the dirtiest part of Derby, and are urged to visit the Water Engine on the rear side of St. Michael's Mill. We find the engine a very ingenious work. A water-wheel throws up river water to a large cistern close by St. Michael's Church, and from it the town is supplied by means of pipes with water for cleansing purposes at a low rate; and not only so, it turns a malt mill, and a machine for boring elm trees for pipes, all at the same time, and managed by one man. The ingenious inventor, Mr. Sorocold, recently re-hung the bells of All Saints', and set the chimes to five tunes. Unfortunately the eighth bell, having been cracked, is being re-cast, so the chimes do not play at present. Behind the mill is another novelty, a silk mill, just erected by Mr. Crocket, but report has it that he is financially embarrassed, and no one seems to believe in his enterprise.

Returning to Queen Street, the noble tower of All Saints' is seen to best advantage. The graveyard is pleasantly shaded, and the cool green of the foliage makes the hues of the old masonry of the church look richer and warmer. But how decayed is the fabric! so different from the tower, yet its pinnacles are sadly weather-worn. Within, the mayor is chosen each Michaelmas, and he is afterwards publicly proclaimed at the Cross. Irongate, with its inns and shops, is quite in gloom, so narrow is the street, and so much do its old houses overhang.

Entering the Market Place by the Market Head, the Cross in the centre first attracts attention. Under it is a conduit, well supplied with water from Becket's Well. It is reached by steps, and from the uppermost arise four columns supporting a canopy, very effective and happily conceived. The Town Hall, with the Gaol below, is centuries old, tattered and time-worn, and often has the suggestion been made that Derby deserves a new one. On the east side, just where the Morledge begins, is a goodly mansion, with a large quadrangular court in front, and a garden reaching the river behind. It is known as the "Court;" and, according to tradition, Charles I. lodged in it during one of his visits to Derby, as also he did in the large house on the north side, on the occasion of another visit. On the west side is a handsome range of brick, in modern taste, built not long since by Mr. Crompton, at whose house the Protestant Dissenters hold, or recently held, their meetings. This hall, for so it may be called, is built partly over the Shambles, while in front it rests upon stone columns forming a covered and slightly elevated pavement, where the country people sell eggs, butter, and poultry. The Rotton Row behind is almost as narrow as the gate. Then comes the Corn Market, with its posts, about which the different sorts of grains are placed for sale. Still proceeding, we have a narrow alley, Leather Lane, on the left, leading into the Market Place, just beyond Town Hall, and another on the right, St. James' Lane. On the latter we next pass the "Red Lion" and "White Lion" inns, both set back from the broad street. The latter is a picturesque gabled building, with many windows, and overlooking the brook. Then, stretched across the foot of the hill and over the brook, is the County Gaol. It is a brick and stone structure, over a bold arch leading into the "Parish."

If so disposed we may now call at the Thorntree Inn, which stands at the corner of the lane of the same name, and has a conspicuous thorn tree which grows in front, and drink the best ale in Derby, which should be good seeing that the staple industry of the town is malting. Adjoining it is the respectable residence of Mr. Wagstaffe, whose daughter has recently married Mr. Fox, an esteemed woollen draper of the town, who is destined to become mayor soon. Babington Hall and its gateway, with chamber over and arms on front, like Peter's Church and the Grammar School, is time-worn and decayed. The house beyond* is now the residence of Mr. Gregge, brother-in-law to Mr. Borrow, J.P., the most influential gentleman in the town. This house was formerly by, and long belonged to, the Mellor family: Henry Mellor, the first Mayor of Derby, was perhaps the actual builder.

With a glance at the small houses at the junction of the London and Osmaston Roads, appropriately called "Knock-a-down," we make for the high ledge by Bag Lane, a rather poverty-stricken locality, but on the slope of Castle Hill, and overlooking the pleasant green Holmes, is Mr. Beardsley's gabled mansion, which, like Hardwick Hall, is "more glass than wall," and further to the right is the large and handsome new residence of Isaac B. Esq., surrounded by a park, in Castle Fields. We return to the Gaol by the Thorntree Lane, and making our way by Brookside, past Green Lane and a wooden bridge which gives access to St. James' Lane, we enter the Warburton. Its three best houses are those of Mr. Mundy, Mr. Gisburn (a fine old house, built by an ancestor, the doorway of which bears the date, 1611), and Mr. Roberts.

St. Werburgh's Church has been rebuilt about fifteen years in the present classical style; but the tower, new in 1610, is now greying with age. The church fell during a flood, strange to say, on a fifth of November, a circumstance that gave rise to a silly rhyme—which caused much ill-feeling between Churchmen and Dissenters at the time. The interior has recently been enriched by a beautiful font-cover, surmounted with a brass pelican, and two large chandeliers—all the gift of Mr. Bens. Alvaston; but, best of all, the daily services in this church are an example to other churches might well follow.

" Fifth of November, Gunpowder Plot,
The Church is fall'n; and why not?"

Here we can turn to the right into Sadlergate, or to the left by Dayson to the Abbey Barns, but we will proceed up Friar Gate. The Friary, the residence of Mr. Dalton. Through the handsome street gates, and between the trees of the avenue behind, a glimpse may be obtained of the picturesque lofty chimneys, and quaint windows of this Elizabethan mansion; and on the brook side beyond is a barn, which is probably a relic of the pre-Reformation religious house.† Just beyond it is the Presbyterian meeting-house, the

* Formerly known as Sitwell Hall; now, as Babington House.

Dissenting place of worship in the town. Higher up the street widens, and is used for the horse and beast fairs: here, on the left, will shortly be built the almshouses for clergymen's widows, but it would have been more seemly if the late Mr. Large had left his property to his poor relatives. Stretching away on the right is Nun's Green. A cottage here and there defines its bounds. The brook winds through it, and is crossed by two bridges. There is the Bowling Green, and there the Pinfold. Yonder, the bakers stack their gorse, and the carpenters their timber, while near the centre is the Kennel for the town hounds, for the site of which the hunt present the mayor with a brace of hares, ready dressed for dinner, every Michaelmas day.

We may cross the Green direct for Lodge Lane, or take the road along its western margin: we will choose the latter. We linger at the old corn mill, and listen to the dreamy clack-clack of its wheel, and the splash of the water. Then come the remains of the Nunnery; and ever and anon a cottage pleasantly overlooking the green. Our road now turns to the right, townwards. Here is Lodge Lane; then comes St. Helen's Walk. Now, some small houses facing the brook and its willows. Walker Lane and its dingy nooks, next; and we find ourselves at the foot of St. Mary's Gate. On our right is the corn mill of Mr. Osborne, a gentleman who has just been made a Justice of the Peace. Over the pond close by it is the Cucking Stool, where scolding wives and dishonest brewers get a ducking free. At the lower end of St. Mary's Gate, on the left, is the Shire or County Hall, erected about half a century ago. It is set back in a court-yard, open to the street, and graced with a double row of lime trees. The roomy interior is occasionally hired for plays; the Clerk of the Peace, the Treasurer, and other families, always having free passes.

DERBY UNDER THE EARLIER GEORGES.

As the trial of Dr. Sacheverel conclusively proved that Derby had High Church and Tory leanings, it is not surprising that the Whig proclivities of George I. made that monarch unpopular in this town. When Jacobitism blazed into actual rebellion in 1715, there were (to follow quaint Hutton) "frequent riots in favour of the abdicated House of Stuart. Personal insults and broken windows were the result. This wildfire was fed with combustibles from the pulpit; that spot, which ought to have corrected the errors of man, brought them into action. Sturges, of All Saints', prayed publicly for King James; but, after a moment's reflection, 'I mean King George.' The congregation became tumultuous; the military gentlemen drew their swords and ordered him out of the pulpit, into which he never returned. He pleaded a slip of the tongue; but if he had dipped into the New Testament he might have sheltered himself under a better excuse, for we are there commanded to pray for our enemies. Harris, of St. Peter's, was repeatedly called to order by the powerful voice of the magistrates. Cantril, of St. Alkmund's, drank the Pretender's health upon his knees; and the 30th January became the most holy day of the year. But the wiser Lockett, of St. Michael's, rather chose to amuse himself with mowing his grass-plot than meddling with politics."—(Hutton.)

In 1717, Derby entered a new industrial era. Previously, silk-throwing was a foreign secret; but, about 1715, John Lombe, "a man of spirit, a good draughtsman, and an excellent mechanic," went to Italy to learn the art. It was a perilous undertaking, but by judicious bribes he obtained full particulars. He then returned to England with two Italian workmen, and fixed upon Derby as a suitable place for a mill. In the above year he erected the recently demolished mill on the Derwent, long known as the Old Silk Mill, the first of its kind erected in England. Derby monopolised the English trade; but Italian revenge was at hand. Lombe did not enjoy the fruits of his enterprise more than three or four years, when he was poisoned by an artful Italian woman sent by the manufacturers of that country. His funeral was the most superb that Derby, up to that time, had seen; but the manufacture was now too well established, for his early death—he was only twenty-nine—to deter it. It remained the monopoly of the Lombes until 1732; but for more than a century it was the chief trade town, reaching its culmination about forty years ago, when every ay building adapted for the purpose was pressed into requisition. After th industry rapidly dwindled, in common with the English silk trade generally.

All Saints' Church was the source and centre of a series of un squabbles during the eight years that followed 1720. All the townspeople agreed that the old structure was in a ruinous condition; but they were hop divided as to the steps that should be taken. The patrons—the Corpor headed the faction that advocated simple restoration; while the headstroi imperious incumbent, Dr. Hutchinson, that for demolition and reb Matters came to a climax in 1723, for during a February night he had intr a band of energetic workmen who succeeded in so completely overturni internal fittings and the roof by sunrise, that the restorationists were con by force of circumstances to regard the demolition as practically un fait ac. The acrimonious bickerings, however, so far from ceasing, only increased a went on. Each party rushed their accusations into print, until, at len 1728, the Doctor resigned his post, to the unspeakable relief of the majo the townsfolk. These squabbles were most unfortunate; for not only did the first place bring about the destruction of a fine old church, but afte were responsible for the omission of many details ordered by the architect present church.

The first Derby newspaper appears to have been a very short-lived called The Derby Postboy. A rival to this, The Derby Postman, was stas 1719. Seven years later it appeared as a new series, under the designa The British Spy and Derby Postman, a small twopenny weekly. In The Derby Mercury, started also as a twopenny weekly, made its appea and the British Spy soon ceased to exist. The Mercury—one of the papers in the provinces—has continued uninterruptedly ever since, a throughout. In 1738 The Derby Journal was started in opposition to it was soon given up; and it is only since 1823, when the Report published, the Mercury has had a permanent rival.

In 1732, a remarkable performance was advertised in the Mercury. G a Frenchman, undertook to entertain the town by various perilous exploit rope stretched from the top of All Saints' tower to that of St. Michael's, as down it on a grooved breastplate, blowing a trumpet and firing a pistol e and other performances. Hutton appears to have been a spectator; : remarks that "feats of activity are sure to catch the younger part of the No amusement was seen but the rope; walls, posts, trees, and house mounted for the pleasure of flying down; if a scaffolding pole could be fo was reared for the convenience of flying; nay, even cats, dogs, and inanimate were applied, in a double sense, to the rope." This "flying raga not cured until 1734, when a shabby and tattered-looking individual put appearance, "who wisely considered that if his performance did not exe others he might as well stay at home, if he had one." His rope stretche All Saints' tower to the foot of St. Mary's Gate. His programme consi drawing a wheelbarrow containing a boy of 13 to the summit; followed downward flight of a donkey, "armed, as before, with a breastplate, and foot a lump of lead about half a hundred." The first part was succa accomplished. Let Hutton describe the rest: "The vast multitude turne eyes towards the ass, which had been braying several days at the top steeple for food, but, like many a lofty courtier for a place, had brayed i The slackness of the rope and the great weight of the animal and its app made it seem, at setting off, as if he was falling perpendicular. The appe was tremendous! About 20 yards before he reached the gates of the Hall the rope broke; from the velocity acquired by the descent he bore al before him. A whole multitude was overwhelmed; nothing was hea dreadful cries, nor seen, but confusion. Legs and arms went to destructio this dire calamity the ass, which maimed others, was unhurt himself, ha pavement of soft bodies to roll over. No lives were lost. As the rope broke it brought down both chimneys and people at the other end of the street. . . . This dreadful catastrophe put an end to the art of flying. It prevented the operator from making the intended collection; and he sneaked out of Derby as poor as he sneaked in."

This date furnishes another vivid glimpse of bygone Derby. A butcher, named Hewitt, and a servant girl he wished to marry, were convicted of poisoning his wife, and were sentenced to the gallows. Thus far, is common-place enough; but Hutton throws out a little circumstance—doubtless a general custom—which shows how very changed is our treatment of criminals. "While the two criminals under sentence attended divine service at St. Peter's, John rendered her every civility. Heavily ironed, and half dead with the apprehension of her approaching fate, she could scarcely rise from her knees, when he took her round the waist, in the face of a crowded church, and tenderly raised her." Still more graphic is Hutton's description of the punishment of a notorious Mrs. Beare (supposed to have been implicated in the above murder), who was sentenced to stand two market days in the pillory, to be followed by two years' imprisonment. "I saw her," to quote Hutton again, "with an easy air, ascend the hated machine, which overlooked an enraged multitude. All the apples, eggs, and turnips that could be begged, bought, or stolen, were directed at her devoted head. The stagnate kennels were robbed of their contents, and became the cleanest part of the street. . . . The next Friday she appeared again, not as a young woman, but as an old one, ill, swelled, and decrepit; she seemed to have advanced 30 years in one week. The keeper, suspecting some finesse from the bulk of her head, took off 10 or 12 coverings, among which was a pewter plate, fitted to the head, as a guard against the future storm. He tossed it among the crowd, and left no covering but the hair. The pillory being made stronger (she broke loose on the previous occasion), and herself being weaker, she was fixed for the hour, where she received the severe peltings of the mob, and they, her groans and prayers." How fickle is public opinion: when her term of imprisonment was ended, she was escorted from gaol by a band of music! So far, Hutton; he, however, seems to have been unaware of this notorious lady's after career. Within four months of her release she again made the acquaintance of her prison friends, on suspicion of having received stolen goods. And the very next year she was again committed to prison for 12 months!

It may be mentioned here that the following are some of the crimes, other than murder, for which the sentence of hanging was carried out in Derby in the 18th and early part of the 19th centuries:—Horse-stealing in 1723, 1726, and 1727; sheep-stealing in 1752, 1753, and 1801; housebreaking, 1801 and 1812; highway robbery, 1738, 1740, and 1801; stealing money (£5 17s.) in 1753; forgery in 1800; rick-firing, 1734 and 1819; attempted murder in 1741; and coining in 1740. Startling as it may seem, a woman was burned in Derby (for murder) as recently as 1784. Burning was a civil punishment for female murderers, and was abolished in 1790, so that this Derby example of the punishment must have been one of the last in England. A girl was thus executed in 1693, and a woman in 1601. The last-mentioned took place in Windmill Pit; and as Joan Waste was burned there also, that unhappy spot was probably the usual place for such executions. It was observed above that the pillory was in the Market Place, and that Mrs. Beare was placed in it on market days. This was in order to give the greatest possible publicity to her punishment, and the same motive applies with equal force to the punishment of whipping. In 1691, for instance, two misdemeanants were ordered to "bee stript to the wast and whipt till bloody, in the heighth of the market at Derby;" so also similar cases in 1685, 1718, and 1729.

In 1745 Derby passively played an important part in English history. Early in December the town was thrown into a panic by the sensational news that "bonnie Prince Charlie" and his Highlanders, flushed with the victory of Prestonpans, were advancing upon it, and already were within a few miles of Ashbourne. The principal inhabitants left the town as speedily as possible. volunteers, recently raised by the Duke of Devonshire and other local magnates together with the militia and the soldiers—making a total of about a thousand men—beat a torchlight retreat that night to Nottingham, headed by His Grace. This was undoubtedly their wisest course, seeing that the enemy's force was at least seven times stronger; but for many a year after, this retreat was the subject of local gibes and lampoons.* The following morning the invaders entered the town, most of them, according to the Mercury of the time, "a parcel of shabby, lousy, pitiful-looking fellows, mixed up with old men and boys, dressed in plaid and as dirty shirts," who pilfered houses and shops, and committed every manner of enormities; and their hussars, "fierce and desperate ruffians."

The Prince's quarters were Exeter House, a Full Street mansion, demolished thirty years or more ago to make room for the little-needed Burleigh Street. His staff consisted of the Dukes of Athol and Perth, Lords Elcho, Gordon Murray, Pitsligo, Nairn, and others, who were lodged in the best houses in the town.

There is a vague tradition to the effect that the gaiety of the handsome young chevalier was remarkable. It is difficult to believe this. He certainly gave the Guelph generals the slip, and the way to London was open. But it is fair evidence that, on his way, he turned aside to meet some of the leading Jacobites of the district at Radbourne Hall, where he also expected a large sum of money from his Leicestershire and South Midland adherents.† The money, however, had not turned up, and it was found subsequently that it had been appropriated by the bearers. This must have damped his spirits. Then was added to this the cool reception at Derby. The Jacobite tendencies of 1714 were so far subsided that in spite of the tempting offer of 5s. advance, and £5 when the metropolis was reached, only three natives—"idle and unprincipled fellows"—could be prevailed upon to join his flag. Still it is evident that the march on London was not at first given up, for the advance guard held Swarkeston Road the next day. But in the evening of that day a council of war was held, and finally decided upon retreat. The Prince and Lord Nairn were for making a dash on London, but their bold proposal was overruled. Three armies were hemming them in. The French had not fulfilled their promises, and the English promises were still more delusive. To retreat was dangerous enough; to advance was suicide. So next day the red-crossed banners were turned northwards by noon not a Highlander was left in the town.

It is not altogether strange that a town so Jacobite at the commencement of the century should have completely turned round on this occasion. We were engaged in a great Continental war, in which our chief enemies were the French. The Young Pretender and his father had long been protégés of the French Court, and this intrusion into English territory had something more than French approval. The "Forty-five" incident was as un-English as it could be. It was a foreign invasion, rather than a revolution to place a rightful heir on the throne. But more judicious still was the ostentatious Romanism of the young prince's French priest, whom he had appointed to the see of Chester, celebrated High Mass at All Saints'; and, as if it was not sufficient to thus lose the sympathy of the Protestant masses—who were never more Protestant—he must needs ruffle the English Papists by having it celebrated according to the Roman use, instead of the Sarum, the then English use. Personally disliked as the first two Georges were, the country had steadily progressed under their rule; and it was not likely sensible Englishmen, and Derby folk in particular, should care to see this exchanged for the uncertainties of a restored Stuart regimé. The troubles of James II.'s reign had not faded from the national mind.

* According to a scarce local broadsheet of 1745, they were afraid to stay at Nottingham and so pushed towards Mansfield for safety, on their way thither being scattered at night by the trampling of a herd of cattle, which they mistook for the enemy! It is represented that they heard of the retreat of the Young Pretender at Retford, upon which they returned to Derby "Joy and Gladness."

For very many years after the "Forty-five," Derby ran a quiet and uneventful course. For several years, a "pestilence among horned cattle" inflicted the country, and in 1747 it prevailed so much in this district, that the mayor suspended the annual game of football, for which Derby had time-out-of-mind been famous. It is difficult to see how football could have affected the disease; perhaps there was a wish to have the game abolished, and this was made a pretext. The following year, Derby celebrated with unusual gusto the Treaty of Aix-la-Chapelle, the more so, perhaps, from the fact that the Stuart rebellion was an episode of the long war, which it concluded.

In a few more years the "Seven Years' War," which gave us Canada, broke out. An entry in the Parish Books of All Saints' furnishes a curious glimpse of the way in which prisoners of war were utilised, and of the insular prejudices of the time. For the last three or four years of the war, three hundred Frenchmen were sent on parole to this town, who were allowed sixpence a day. "Their behaviour at first was impudent and insolent; at all times vain and effeminate; and their whole deportment light and unmanly—and we may venture to say, from our observation and knowledge of them, that in any future war this nation has nothing to fear from them as an enemy. During their abode here, the road from this place to Nottingham was, by an Act of Parliament, repaired. Numbers of these people were daily employed, who worked in their bag-wigs, pig-tails, ruffles, &c., &c., a matter which afforded us much merriment. But to their honour let it be remembered, that scarce one act of fraud or theft was committed by any of them during their stay amongst us."

It would be strange if so central a town as Derby was not visited by John Wesley. His first visit was in 1762, when he did not intend to preach, but was persuaded to give an address to a house full of people. His next visit was of more formal character, in 1764, when the mayor gave him permission to preach in the Market Place, and promised to suppress any disturbance which might arise. According to Wesley's diary, he was informed that there was "a general inclination" to hear him, "even among people of fashion"; but he goes on to say, "A multitude of people were gathered at five, and were pretty quiet till I had named my text. Then the beasts of the people lifted up their voice, hallooing and shouting on every side. Finding it impossible to be heard, I went softly away. An innumerable retinue followed me, but only a few pebble stones were thrown, and no one hurt at all. In the same or the following year the first Methodist chapel was built in Derby, a building now used as a malt-house, in St. Michael's Lane. In this chapel the two Wesleys, Fletcher of Madeley, and other worthies preached to admiring congregations; and as early as 1786, only two years after public attention had been called to Sunday schools by Raikes, of Gloucester, children were gathered here for instruction. Its inconvenience, and the close vicinity of a knacker's yard, led to the erection of, and removal of the congregation to, a more commodious building in King Street, in 1805.

Two Derby men shone forth this century with more than merely local light. John Wright, or, as he is universally known, "Wright of Derby," the homely and retiring artist, whose effects in light and shade have, perhaps, never been surpassed, spent most of his life under the shadow of St. Alkmund's Church, where his monument declares that

Where taste and genius mark him for their own."

The other light was the renowned Dr. Erasmus Darwin, who, although not a native, passed his best years in the town and district. His epitaph at Breadsall Church best expresses his sterling qualities, thus—"Physician, Poet, Philosopher." In his literary works, of which "Zoonomia" and "The Botanical Garden" are chief, is the germ of those theories which in later times his grandson, the late Charles Darwin, so successfully worked out, and which have so profoundly modified our views of Nature.

A glance now at the

DERBY OF HUTTON AND PILKINGTON.

Hutton's plan of 1791 shows that, however much the town may have increased since Woolley wrote in 1712, its increase had been but trifling. Indeed, himself bears witness to this. He states that he "was present in 1712, in a conversation between two natives, when one challenged the other to produce an instance of a house being built upon a new foundation. The affirmative (remembered) was not proved, which showed that a very small, or rather no, increase had attended it." Still, since that date, the town had shown signs of expansion; but, as yet, the burgesses failed to realize their manufacturing future. Hutton sceptically concluded that as the streets were so narrow and dark for two thousand years, they would continue so for two thousand years to come. Bridge Gate continued to be the most northern part of the town. Lodge Lane was in the open country. Nuns Green was still open land, except for a strip fringing Friar Gate, which had been sold for building purposes, under the provisions of an Improvement Act of 1768; and the opposite side of the street houses had crept countrywards since 1712. To the south of Friar Gate and the Wardwick were gardens and fields, except a small cluster of houses at Abbey Barns. Houses lined Green Lane as far as Cross Lane (now Macklin Street); they extended along Osmaston Street as far as Sacheverel Street, and scarcely so far southwards along the London Road as they clustered round Cockpit Hill. Cottages and mills dotted the sides of the Morledge; but the east bank of the Derwent was open country, except for a few houses and the porcelain works at the foot of St. Mary's Bridge. The parish churches were still sufficient for the Anglican population; but the Unitarian formists, now, in addition to the old Friar Gate meeting-house, had an Independent place of worship on Brookside (now the Victoria Street Chapel), and a Methodist in St. Michael's Lane. The timbered Town Hall of 1712 had been replaced in 1730, by a handsome brick and stone pedimented structure, on the site of the old. The Market Cross had disappeared. The present Assembly Room had been built about twenty years. The Theatre (now used for religious services), in Lodge Lane, built about the same time, was as plain as the preceding was ornate, as Hutton remarked, was "more striking than the street in which it stood." The town possessed four parish workhouses, which, however, must have been small, for they harboured only 167 persons. It also contained four almshouses, which, as Hutton remarked, "would induce a stranger to suppose it a town of rascals! But, to the honour of the inhabitants, they are often empty." There were also these were houses of correction, and two, jails; one of each for the borough and the other two for the county. The County Jail and House of Correction were erected on Nuns Green in 1756, and was a passable building; but the old Jail in Willow Row was long a standing disgrace to the town.

Pilkington's "View of Derbyshire" gives a succinct account of the state of the town in 1789. Malting, one of the oldest of the chief industries, had declined, but there were still forty-two offices constantly employed during the winter. Silk, of course, had already come to the front, and was rapidly developing. There was no less than twelve mills of "various sizes and constructions," but the Old Silk Mill remained the largest. This industry found employment for at least 1,200 hands. Stocking-making had largely increased, chiefly owing to the inventions of Messrs. Jedediah Strutt and William Woollatt. Already more than 1,156 frames were in use by the hosiers of the town, but most of the workers lived in the villages around; the number residing in the town was estimated at 170. Combing jersey gave employment to thirty-eight persons, and jersey-spinning to ninety-four women. Porcelain had already reached its present reputation, and was still improving. It brought a living to seventy-two persons. The trade of the lapidary and jeweller had been introduced forty-four years before, and was unrivalled in England, except by London, and it employed nearly 100 persons. The marble and gypsum works were "too curious to be passed by without notice."

Their different branches occupied between eighty and ninety men. Cotton picking kept 200 pairs of hands employed. Forty looms were in full swing in the town, and seventy-two in the immediate neighbourhood; and two cotton machines on the Arkwright principle had lately been set up, but one was not going. There was also a mill for slitting and rolling iron, a furnace for smelting copper, and a machine for battering and rolling this metal into sheets for the royal navy. Boats were frequently built for the Derwent navigation.

Hutton estimated the population at ; that is double that of 1712. This indicated progress, solid, if slow; and the hum of the mills and the thuds of the metal works bore witness to this. This progress was doubtless due, in great measure, to the introduction of the silk trade, which now employed one-seventh of the population. The small increase in the size of the town told another tale,—Derby was getting more and more crowded. Courts and alleys were being formed, where, half a century previous, gardens and orchards bloomed in the open spaces behind the houses of the central streets. This increase of density of population is well illustrated by All Saints' parish, which, in 1712, was as completely enclosed by the town as at the present time; yet its population now is about equal to that of the whole town at that date.

The progress of the town before 1791, however, was small compared with that which followed that date. The population doubled itself by 1821. The number of new roads, bridges, canals, and tramways, actually carried out or projected in the district during the last decade of the 18th century, was extraordinary, indicating how great was the commercial enterprise of the period. By these means the mineral wealth of the surrounding country was opened up, and, Derby, of course, was the chief participant in the benefit. The local trade must have received a strong impulse by the formation of the Derby Canal in 1795, by which the town had easy communication with the Grand Trunk, the Trent, and the minerals of the Erewash valley. The only previous means of transit for heavy goods was the inadequate Derwent navigation, formed in 1719, which the new canal closed.

ANTE-REFORM EVENTS.

For the first 15 years of this century, local events were few and unimportant. Men's thoughts were turned to the great Napoleonic drama on the Continent. But when, one June morning of 1815, the London coach brought the welcome news of Waterloo (after so furious a drive that the passengers, one and all, refused to proceed further in it), the town went wild with excitement, and commemorated the event with great rejoicings. The transition from war to peace was, at first, no unmixed blessing. Trade was dislocated; food dear; money scarce. Vast numbers of men were thrown out of employment through the closing and curtailment of Government works. The attention, no longer diverted to foreign affairs, fell upon the open wounds of home administration. On every side there was a cry for reform, only to be stifled by the Government. Manchester operatives collected in their thousands to march to London to petition the Regent in person, and in several manufacturing centres the military had to be called out to put down riots. In the midst of these things, Derby again attracted the national attention.

In the early part of 1817, some hare-brained stockingers and weavers hatched a plot in a Pentrich inn to overthrow the Government. Jeremiah Brandreth, their leader, incited them to deeds of violence with such doggerel as this:

"Every man his skill must try;
He must turn out and not deny.
No bloody soldiers must we dread;
We must turn out and fight for bread.
The time is come, you plain must see,
The Government opposed must be."

As they passed from village to village, robbing houses and stables, their number increased until it reached nearly three hundred. They decided to attack Nottingham, but were dispersed by hussars at Eastwood, when thirty of them were captured. These, with others caught later, were detained to take their trial at a special assize on a charge of high treason. In the sequel, the three leaders—Brandreth, Ludlam, and Turner—were found guilty, and were sent to be hung, drawn, and quartered, the ancient penalty of this crime. The quartering, however, was remitted, but not the beheading. The execution place at the old County Prison in Friar Gate. The prisoners were first drawn round the prison yard on hurdles drawn by horses. Then they were piked and hanged for half an hour. The block, two sacks of sawdust, two knives, two axes, and a large basket, were placed on a platform erected in front of the jail, and surrounded by cavalry. The executioner was a muscular Derbyshire man, whose name was kept a profound secret; both he and his assistant wore black robes, which added to the gruesomeness of the scene. The corpse of the chief leader, Brandreth, was first placed upon the block. Whisk, went the brigadier, and Off fell the head; and as the executioner lifted it up and exclaimed, "Behold the head of the traitor, Jeremiah Brandreth!" a horrible frantic groan arose from the assembled multitude. Then the other bodies were mutilated after the same fashion. The poet Shelley was a spectator, and related the scene in a poem, in which he shortly after published, "We Pity the Plumage, but Forget the Bird." The bodies were buried at night in St. Werburgh's Churchyard; the block is still to be seen in the Derby Prison, where, its wood being always green, it has given rise to a tradition that the blood of the unhappy men has not dried, and never will. This was the last case in which the old penalty for high treason was carried out.

No local event of consequence transpired until the rejection of the Reform Bill by the House of Lords on October 8th, 1831. Throughout the country there was a ferment of the people at once exploded in riots, portending civil war. Nowhere were they more violent than at Bristol, Nottingham, and Derby. At the latter place, as soon as the information was received by special coach, muffled drums were rung at All Saints' and St. Peter's; and all day long excited crowds were seen on the houses of those who were hostile to the bill—smashing windows and tearing up palings and shrubs. Next day (Sunday) the rioters demanded the release of two persons who had been arrested the previous night. This being refused, they attacked the Borough Prison, which was speedily broken open and all the prisoners released. Then a rush was made upon the County Prison, where they met with a determined resistance, being repulsed with fatal effect. Baffled, they returned to the town, demolishing houses and indiscriminately breaking windows. The arrival of the 15th Hussars from Nottingham had a quieting effect, and the mob dispersed gradually. Nevertheless, the tumult was renewed, and it was not until the Riot Act was read and the military acted, during which one man was shot and several were wounded, that order was restored. Derby was evidently wedded to the cause of Reform, so it is not surprising that the successful passage of this bill in the following year was celebrated in the town with unwonted joy and festivity.

DERBY IN 1832.

Sixty years ago, the population only slightly exceeded 23,000. The water supply was derived solely from springs and wells, except that old St. Mary's Tower still dispensed river water for culinary purposes. The chief supply of drinking water was furnished by that curious and ancient cistern known as Becket Well, from which pipes supplied the Market Place and St. Peter's Church. Gas had been introduced about seven years, and was rapidly superseding coal. The streets had only recently been macadamized. The business portion of the town lay between St. Alkmund's Church and the Corn Market, St. Peter's Church, like Friar Gate now, being an intermixture of a few shops and many houses. The residence of Mr. Strutt, the donor of the Arboretum, was at the lower end of this street, and, if externally plain, was replete with pictures and statuary within. Monotonously quiet were these streets, except on the dashing stage-coaches, with their spic-and-span drivers and re-echoing for Derby was as important a coaching centre as it is now a railway centre. Where now is Victoria Street was the open brook, with side roads fenced off with wooden rails and posts. A wooden bridge spanned it between Green Lane and the stables of the picturesque old hostelry—the White Lion, where now stands the Royal Hotel; and St. Peter's and St. James' Bridges were of substantial stone. The latter was the entrance into St. James' Lane, dark and narrow; but Leather Lane, on the opposite side of the Corn Market, had, some years before, been demolished to make room for the new Town Hall, the first erected on the present site. This hall, which was burnt down in 1841, was in some respects similar to its successor, the present structure, but decidedly more handsome, its chief feature being a bold, projecting pediment, supported on Ionic columns. Although the removal of the previous hall from the open space in 1825 made the Market Place more roomy, the western side was still blocked by the Shambles. Irongate, like Sadlergate still, was narrow and tortuous, only more so, for at its lower end was barely space for two vehicles to pass each other on the roadway, and the footpaths were less than three feet wide. Fronting All Saints' was a lofty wrought iron palisade, with elaborate gateway, very similar to those still remaining in front of St. Mary's Gate Chapel, then the residence of Mr. Samuel Evans, the banker, and the old Silk Mill. Queen Street has since undergone but little change, except that the tottering old church of St. Michael and old St. Alkmund's, with its pretty tower, have disappeared in the interval. Northwards, the town had not much expanded by 1832. North Parade was its most northern point on the west side of the Derwent; westwards, Nuns' Green was being rapidly covered with new streets and houses, an Act having been obtained in 1792 for its sale. The newly-built St. John's Church was on its fringe, while in the fields, right away beyond Friar Gate, frowned the new County Prison (now Her Majesty's), then and long afterwards considered the most perfect in England. The old county jail in Friar Gate, the one which the Reform Bill rioters broke into, now belonged to the borough. Uttoxeter New Road and Abbey Street had not yet come into being, but around Kensington, Talbot, and Curzon Streets was a fair sprinkling of new houses. The Wardwick was highly genteel, and had a decided penchant for law and medicine. Its fine Jacobean mansion of 1611 had not yet been curtailed to make room for Becket Street. Along the Burton and Normanton roads the town was steadily creeping, but some of the new streets in that direction, as Haarlem, Britannia, and Waterloo Streets, are by no means a flattering index of the sanitary progress of the time. Wilmot, Bradshaw, and Traffic Streets represent the edge of what may be regarded as the continent of 1832 Derby; while the cottages that crowded Grove Street and the adjacent portion of the Normanton Road (tenanted chiefly by the employes of Mr. Ambrose Moore's silk mill, the old Government Dépôt), Grove Terrace, and Litchurch and Regent Streets, formed an island apart. On the other side of the Infirmary, Castle Fields were being cut up for streets, and the new church of St. George (now Holy Trinity) was awaiting a purchaser. This church had a queer beginning. It was built on speculation, but the builder becoming bankrupt, the creditors seized upon it, and eventually sold it for little more than half its cost to erect. On the other side of the Derwent the expansion was considerable, the whole space between Little Chester Green and Erasmus Street being tolerably well filled. St. Mary's was the only bridge over the river for vehicular traffic, but foot-passengers from the Market Place to the Nottingham road could save the long detour of Queen Street by passing through Darby's Yard (an alley on the site of Derwent Street), and over a precarious wooden bridge, to Exeter Street.

Derby in 1832 possessed six churches, twelve Dissenting chapels, and a small Roman Catholic chapel, now used as a school. The Assembly Room and struggling Bold Lane Theatre were the only places of amusement, although the County and Town Halls had spacious rooms for public gatherings. There were no recreation grounds, except two small subscription bowling greens. The races were held on the Holmes. The flourishing Mechanics' Institute, then seven years old, furnished intellectual recreation and popular science lectures, and the Philosophical Society in St. Helen's Street, founded by famous Dr. Darwin, was its more exclusive counterpart. The only important library was that of Messrs. Wilkins and Ellis, Queen Street—subscription one guinea. Two newspapers were issued—the Mercury and the Reporter, both weeklies. The local industries had undergone some change of years. Derby ale had lost its reputation. Porcelain and malt were their decadence. Silk had by no means as yet reached its culminating point, though at this time it found employment for some 2,000 persons. Although iron was a young industry, it already gave promise of its importance. Dyeing, spar and marble working, and plaster making, accounted as among the leading trades. Perhaps, however, education formed the most striking contrast between Derby then and now. Up till 1810 the public school was the old Grammar School, but, notwithstanding its very antiquity and distinguished alumni—Linacre, the founder of the Royal College of Physicians; Juxon, the famous Bishop of London; Flamsteed, the Astronomer Royal; Blackwell, author of "Sacred Classics;" Wilmot, the poet and gentle Chief Justice; Bage, the novelist; "Wright of Derby," the painter; Alleyne Fitzherbert, Baron St. Helens, the eminent diplomat—such discredit was it fallen in the "twenties," that for three years the late W. Hope, of St. Peter's, was the only scholar. Still, this is no criterion of state of education at the time. By 1832, seven new public schools—Lancaster National, Wesleyan, and Infant—had been opened, but the total of children names on their books (1,290) was less than the actual attendance of a single one of our larger present Board schools.

An "Appendix to the First Report of the Commissioners on the Municipal Corporations of England and Wales," printed by order of the House of Commons in 1835, gives us a concise insight into the which preceded the Municipal Reform Bill of that year. The governing authority was that of Charles II. The Corporation consisted of mayor, nine aldermen, fourteen brothers, and fourteen capital burgesses, who collectively formed the Common Council. The mayor was appointed by the aldermen and brethren. Michaelmas from the aldermen. He was a justice of the peace, clerk of the market, judge of the court of record, and returning officer of the borough. He had custody of the goal; his allowance was 200 guineas per annum; and he was a justice of the peace for the year following his year of office. The aldermen were elected for life by the aldermen from the brethren. The four senior aldermen were justices of the peace. The brethren were elected for life by the aldermen, and brethren from the capital burgesses; and the capital burgesses were likewise elected for life by these, and in addition, the capital burgesses were elected by the burgesses at large. The freedom of the borough was obtained by the sons of freemen born in the borough being free by a servitude of seven years apprenticeship to a freeman within the borough, and by grant of the corporation. The Appendix here exposes an abuse of long standing: the Corporation had in the habit of making honorary freemen for the express purpose of securing the interest of the Whig party. All the burgesses had an exemption from toll on the market, and a right of common on certain lands belonging to the town.

The Corporation officers were the high steward (a merely nominal office), recorder, the town clerk, three chamberlains, two serjeants at mace, a town gaoler, inspectors of pinders and tenters of the common. The recorder was appointed by the Corporation, and his appointment was confirmed by the Crown. He was a magistrate; and his salary was £3 6s. 8d. a year. He appointed the town clerk, who was also coroner, clerk of the peace, judge of the court of sessions, solicitor to the Corporation, and clerk to the magistrates. The average amount of his emoluments from all the above-named employments was about £500 a year. Two of the chamberlains were members of the Corporation; the third was and he acted as steward, with a salary of £40 a year. The chamberlains were annually appointed by the Common Council, and had the management of the estate of the Corporation. The serjeants-at-mace summoned juries, served processes, and acted as constables, with a salary of one guinea a week, Sunday fees, and a new hat and cloak every two years; when also the town crier received new raiment, his salary being £10 a year, and the receipts of his bell. The gaoler was appointed by the mayor, and he had a free residence at the gaol and £50 a year. The inspector of pounds received the fees for impounding the trespassing cattle.

For the admission of freemen by birth or servitude £1 was charged for the stamp, and 6s. by the town clerk for the oath and enrolling. The mayor, the recorder, the ex-mayor, the four senior aldermen, the Bishop of Lichfield, and his chancellor, were justices of peace for the borough. The sessions of the peace were held quarterly; petty sessions, daily; and a court of record once a fortnight. The juries were selected by the mayor and town clerk from the inhabitants generally. The police consisted of six constables, who were paid 21s. weekly, and a high constable, who received a nominal salary of five guineas a year: it is not astonishing that the Appendix remarks that "the force is not sufficient for the protection of the town!" Ten watchmen paced the streets by night; also a small number, but it is pointed out that in consequence of the adoption of the watch-clock, these ten men were more effective than the twenty employed previously. This instrument was the invention of William Strutt, Esq., who used it in his extensive manufactories. Twenty-three of these clocks were so distributed that the whole of the town was constantly and regularly watched, each watchman having to register his movements by the insertion of a key into the clocks he passed on his round. Derby was obviously a-head of other towns in respect to its night guardians. Instead of drawling out the hours and otherwise making their movements known, they had to keep perfect silence and use dark lanterns.

The Corporation were the patrons of St. Alkmund's and All Saints' respectively, worth about £350, and £90 per annum. The master of the Free Grammar School received £40 a year from the Corporation, and the number of scholars had diminished to one. Clearly the Appendix was right in remarking that "in its present state the school is useless to the burgesses!" There were 108 public houses in the town, and the possession of a license added 25 per cent. to the value of a house. The manner in which the Corporation accounts were kept was not a credit to the town. Between the years 1812 and 1821, they had not been audited. The public debt was £11,500, brought about to a great extent by the purchase of the goal and the erection of the new market. Generally "the Corporation had discharged their duty in promoting public improvements, and in giving every facility and accommodation to the traders of Derby, and by abolishing the tolls of the fairs they had materially augmented the traffic." During the previous four years "very considerable additions had been made to the buildings of the town, and it appeared to be a very flourishing place." The poor rates were now 20 per cent. less than they were in 1811.

Under "Remarks," the Appendix states that the "Corporation of Derby has been almost uniformly composed of persons having one opinion upon political subjects, and the anxiety of the Corporation to maintain the ascendancy of their own opinions has led them to create numerous freemen for political purposes. . . . It was stated that the Corporation, whenever they thought the number of the freemen in their interest was 'getting low,' the mayor, or some other influential member of the Corporation, applied to the agent of the Cavendish family, and requested a list of the names of persons to be admitted as honorary freemen. The Corporation took this course because they wished to avail themselves of the interest of the Cavendish family over the freemen so admitted. . . . The agent of his Grace paid the fees on the admission of the honorary freemen. Without the creation of such freemen it was said the Corporation 'could not have kept the Tories quiet; they would have been restless.'" The Appendix, however, is careful to state that no member of the Corporation, except the Duke's agent "had incurred any obligations to the Cavendish family." to proceed: "The creation of numerous honorary freemen had the effect was anticipated, for by this unfair and unjust proceeding a body of voters servient to the views of the Corporation, held in check that portion of the inhabitants opposed to the politics of the Corporation, and thus for 30 years before the passing of the Reform Bill there was no contest for the representation of the borough in Parliament. In all respects, save in the creation of honorary freemen, the conduct of the Corporation had in the main continued to promote the prosperity of the town and to obtain the confidence and respect of the inhabitants."

It is unnecessary to say that the Municipal Reform Act of 1835, an outcome of the Reform Bill, put an end to these abuses. Under the provisions of this Act the town was divided into six wards. The first mayor of the borough was Joseph Strutt, Esq., to whose munificence the town owes its Arboretum. In 1850, the Corporation was invested with the jurisdiction of sanitary matters relating to Derby, hitherto wielded by commissioners appointed under the provisions of the Improvement Act of 1825. The Borough-Extension Bill of 1877 added Litchurch, Little Chester, and other suburbs (with a population of about 17,000) to the town, and the number of wards was increased from the six, formed in 1855, to eight. The Local Government Act of 1888 constituted Derby a county borough.

VICTORIAN DERBY.

Only those who remember the town when Queen Victoria came to the throne can fully appreciate its growth and development during her reign. In 1837, with a population of about 28,000, it has attained to one of some 100,000 souls; but the material prosperity has increased in much greater ratio. The coaching town of half-a-century ago is now one of the greatest—if not the greatest—railway centre of the kingdom. To the Midland Railway Company mainly owing this great change. In 1839 the Midland Counties Railway Company opened their branch line from Nottingham. Soon afterwards the Midland and the Birmingham and Derby Companies pushed their lines to Derby, and all terminated in the handsome station provided by the former company. This station, with its appurtenances, was esteemed the finest and largest in the country, and cost about £128,000 to erect. A glance at the map is sufficient to show that this central junction had a probable magnificent railway future when, in 1844, these companies amalgamated to form the Midland Railway Company, and this new company decided to make Derby its headquarters. The future was assured. The company has grown; its branches stretch from the sea, and to the uttermost parts of the country. Shed after shed, shop after office after office, have been erected on the flat, swampy reach, that, in 1837, was a mile away from the town, to meet the requirements of the expanding trade; until at length the Midland Railway Works rank among the greatest in the world. A new Derby has sprung up around them, and the station bids fair at a distant time to become the centre of the town. Already the army of employed men approaches 15,000, and the development still proceeds. What Derby would have been had the Midland directors made Nottingham their headquarters, as they were inclined to do, we can only guess; the loss of the silk trade during this period must have put an end to all progress and expansion for a long year.

Derby has always been liable to inundations. In 1587, 1610, 1611, 1698, 1740, 1770, and 1796, there were more or less disastrous floods, but none so memorable as that of April 1st, 1842. A heavy rainfall, augmented perhaps by a waterspout, had occurred during the night, and in the small hours of the morning the waters rapidly rose. In vain the watchmen yelled "Waters!" "Thieves!" "Murder!" The sleepers awoke, only to remember that it was the first of April, and slept again. But when they arose a few hours later, they found that the chief streets were surging rivers, some five or six feet deep in Too late then to rescue their perishable goods in cellars and basements! To add to their misery, on the following night the gas failed.

Five years later, the ancient Derby game of football was forcibly put down. It was played on Shrove Tuesday, and the following day was the "Boys' Day," none but juveniles then joining in the game. The rival sides were denominated "All Saints'" and "St. Peter's." The ball was thrown up in the Market Place promptly at two in the afternoon, all the shops being closed and the church bells ringing. The All Saints' goal was the corn mill on Nuns Green; that of St. Peter's, a gate near the bottom of Grove Street. Wherever the ball went was a surging mass of kicking and pushing humanity, rending the air with cries of "All Saints' for ever!" "St. Peter's for ever!" and black eyes and broken bones were alike the reward of victor and vanquished.

Church (Nonconformist as well as Anglican) extension presents another striking index of the growth of the town. While seven Anglican and fourteen Nonconformist churches sufficed at the commencement of the reign, the spiritual needs of the townsfolk are now met by 16 and about 45 respectively, besides many mission halls and rooms. But more striking still is the transformation in the furniture and equipment of these edifices, and the manner in which public worship is conducted. The following description of the interior of St. Peter's Church as shown in a lithograph made between forty and fifty years ago, gives a by no means exaggerated idea of the parish churches of that period.

Time was, when astronomers believed that the earth was the centre around which the host of heaven revolved—the pivot of the universe. Substitute the pulpit for the earth, and you have the dominant principle of St. Peter's half a century ago. The pulpit—a simple, wooden, eight-sided affair, highly elevated, wine-glass like upon a stem or post, and reached by a staircase from behind; the box reading desk was set up in the centre of the building, that is, considerably in front of the chancel. The whole floor of the interior was cumbered with box-like panelled pews, which swelled in importance as they neared the pulpit. They all faced the pulpit. Those of the aisles were placed lengthways, so as to receive full-faced the minister's arrows. Beyond it, they crowded the chancel; back to the Holy Table—face to the preacher. Galleries, gaunt and cumbersome stretched around, dividing the aisles into two storeys; half blocking the chancel (for, Reader, a gallery extended across the chancel!), and filling the tower recess. Like a ship in full canvas, St. Peter's was in full gallery. Ponderous, panelled, and varnishy structures were they, their pews rising as they receded, but their slopes, one and all, made for that cynosure of every eye—the pulpit. The walls were plastered, and apparently colour-washed. The nave and chancel ceilings were flat, like that of a cottage parlour, and the former was graced with a plaster cornice of the "Front Parlour" style of architecture. The ceilings of the aisles were out of sight from the stand-point whence the view was taken—the organ loft, under the tower. But the regiments of hatpegs that adorned their upper walls between the traceried points of their windows—all that the galleries left visible—were conspicuous enough. The pillars were large and circular—apparently the ancient ones cased—and capped with quasi-classical mouldings. Looking eastward, the apex of the glorious east window, then devoid of painted glass, showed above the upper pews of the chancel gallery; while below, can be dimly descried, in our plate, the communion rails, but the perspective has carried the table—if there was one—out of sight, behind this monstrosity. Stone paved alleys; ropes to open and close the fan lights of the clear-story windows; and tulip-globed gas pendants and standards affixed to the galleries, complete this vision of St. Peter's of half-a-century ago. Who would have dreamed that this venerable and beautiful church, now so orthodox and congregational, was once this pulpit-centric auditory, this panelled joinerdom, and boxy emblem of British insularity and unsociability!

Our Queen, like Charles I., has favoured Derby with several visits. In 1843, Her Majesty stayed about ten minutes at the station, on her way to Chatsworth, and a like time on her return. Six years later, she, with the royal family, stayed a night at the Midland Hotel on her way to Balmoral, but did not nearer proach the town. In 1852, she again patronized the hotel, but, as before, did visit the town; Prince Albert and the Prince of Wales, however, inspected Holmes' Carriage Works. The latter, shortly after his almost fatal illness in 1871, called at this town with the Princess of Wales, en route to Chatsworth. On this occasion they honoured Derby School with their presence, and were shown round the Nightingale wing of the Infirmary, then just built. Nine years after the Prince came again, this time as the Queen's representative at the International Agricultural Show, then being held at Derby. But the crowning visit was that of Her Majesty in state in 1891 to lay the foundation of the Royal Infirmary. A hearty and respectful welcome accorded her, the gay and elaborate street decorations, and the blaze of beautiful illuminations at night, all went to show Derby's continued loyalty to the reigning dynasty, and that their adoption of reform and liberal principles had not one whit weakened their attachment to the Throne.

MODERN IMPROVEMENTS.

The expansion of Derby has necessitated a gradual transformation of the central region of the town, to meet the growing needs of the ever-increasing traffic. The commencement of this era of transformation may be set down to the Act of 1768, by which the sale of a part of Nuns Green (the strip adjacent to Friar Gate, already referred to) to defray the expense of the improvement of the street of it, was authorised; or, still more forcibly, as the Act of 1792 for the purpose of that residue to raise the money "for paving, cleansing, lighting, and otherwise improving" the town generally. This Act, however, being found insufficient to meet the increasing wants of the town, another was passed in 1825, by which powers were obtained to pull down the old Town Hall and to rebuild it on the present site, to build a new market, to establish a regular night watch, and generally to remove obstructions and nuisances, and otherwise improve the town; and in order to carry out these improvements a loan of £20,000, at 4 per cent interest, was authorised. No further improvement on a large scale was attempted until 1842, when the brook was arched over to form the present Victoria and Albert Streets. Perhaps no improvement was ever made which brought about a greater transformation in the appearance of the town; and the groups of buildings, the Athenæum, Royal Hotel, and Derby and Derbyshire Bank—then erected on the site of the Red and White Lion Inns, was the pride of the townspeople of that period.

After about 10 years more, the then newly-established Local Board of Health made the much-needed Derwent Street and Bridge. During the next decade and a half, public attention was not so much directed to the traffic as to the institutions of the town. Among the good works of this period may be mentioned the Temperance Hall, present Water Supply, New Cemetery, Public Baths, Corn Exchange, Cattle Market and Bridge, Market Hall, and Recreation Ground. But in the "sixties" the daily blocks warned the Corporation that street improvement could no longer be stayed off. From 1867, when the Corporation was taken in hand, commenced a 15 years' revolution, at the end of which the central parts of the town had quite an altered appearance. Old streets were widened; new ones were cut through dense masses of dilapidated and useless property. Meanwhile, the growing value of land necessitated a large amount of rebuilding, and the conversion of private houses into shops. To look at the large number of public institutions that have been built, or rebuilt, on a larger scale, the last quarter of a century—the Post Office, Drill Hall, Board of Works, Workhouse and Lunatic Asylum, Municipal Library and Museum, Art Gallery, Mechanics' Institute, Theatre, Masonic Hall, County Club, Railway Sanatorium, Orphanage, Children's Hospital, Infectious Diseases Hospital, Deaf and Dumb Institution, Poor Law Offices, and St. Werburgh's Church! Derby School, more than revived, and is now one of the best and most successful institutions of its kind in the country. Tramways have been introduced; most of the pristreets have been paved with wood; two Recreation Grounds have been added to the town, and at this moment the new Royal Infirmary is rapidly approaching completion.

No name shines with greater lustre in connection with this expansion of Derby than that of the late Mr. Michael Thomas Bass, who for more than thirty years represented the borough in Parliament. Simple-minded, unobtrusive, genial, and princely in his gifts, he was beloved of all: his name will shine through ages to come, alongside those of Liversage and Strutt. The chief of his benefactions to Derby was the erection of the Free Library and Museum, at a cost exceeding £25,000. But even this does not represent all he spent on this institution. When, in 1870, the old Town and County Library and Museum was transferred to the Corporation for the present purpose, Mr. Bass immediately authorised the committee to purchase books in his name to the extent of £400. Three years previously he presented the town with the Recreation Ground in the Holmes, which usually bears his name, at a cost of about £4,000; and subsequently he appended thereto the Free Swimming Baths. In 1878 he offered £5,000 towards the acquisition of the Derwent Bank Estate for a public park, and when the scheme unfortunately fell through, he allowed this money to be divided among local charitable institutions. A few years later, he added to the Library and Museum, at great expense, the Art Gallery, upon a piece of ground given by the late Sir Abraham Woodiwiss, the mayor of Derby. About the same time he gave £1,000 to the Children's Hospital; and the School of Art and St. Chad's Church substantially partook of his liberality. This excellent gentleman died in 1884, and Derby promptly commemorated him in imperishable bronze.

Another name adds lustre to modern Derby, that of Herbert Spencer, the well-known author of "Social Statics," "First Principles," "Principles of Psychology," "Study of Sociology," and "Education," works which are known throughout the civilized world. He is a native of Derby. His father was a Derby schoolmaster, in whose school young Spencer for a time taught. He spent his earlier years in Wilmot Street. No tablet marks the house in which this greatest of Derby's sons—who will probably be esteemed the greatest philosopher of the age by generations to come—was born, or that in which he spent his boyhood. But the same may be said of Linacre, Flamstead, Cotton, Wright, and Darwin.

DERBY AND DERBYSHIRE ASSOCIATION FOR THE HELP AND PROTECTION OF GIRLS.

Objects.—I. Prevention of the degradation of girls who are in danger from destitution, neglect, bad homes, &c. II. Rescue of the fallen.

AGENCIES FOR PREVENTIVE WORK ARE :—

(a) The Free Registry, open to girls and young women seeking service. Mistresses pay 3d. entrance fee, and 1s. on engagement. Outfit is supplied when absolutely necessary, to be re-paid from wages, which are paid by the mistress to the hon. sec., and entered to the girl's account.

(b) The Training School, 50 Bridge street, Derby (opposite St. John's Church), where a limited number of girls, under care of a resident lady matron, are prepared for domestic service. Every girl received is expected to be of virtuous character is charged 4s. 6d. weekly for board, re-paid by her friends, or by ladies interested in her improvement, or by her wage she goes to service—the funds not sufficient for free board besides maintenance school. Contributions for free admission of needy and very young girls urgently required. £11 14s. pays board for one year. By special permission, girls may lodge when out of place, or in the shelter, is a subsidiary training household.

Hon. sec. of all the above—Miss Jane Copestake, 5 Vernon street. Office, Bridge street.

AGENCIES FOR RESCUE WORK ARE :—

(a) A Visitor, employed to seek out missing or in dangerous circumstances to receive them, if willing to reformation at

(b) The Temporary Home, 72 North road, Derby (corner of Charnwood road), which affords shelter while investigations are made and plans arranged, either to restore girls to their friends or to place them on conditions of life that help them to their fall. This Refuge is no substitute for a penitentiary, and the association has no permanent rescue home.

Hon. sec. of Rescue Department (temporary) Miss Wilkinson, 37 Gerard street, Derby. The Committee of Management consists of

President—Mrs. Hurt, Alderwasley

Vice-Presidents—Lady Laura Ridding, Barton Priory, Southwell; Mrs. M. Meynell Langley; Mrs. Ogle, The Priory, Derby

Treasurer—Mrs. Longdon, 124 Osmaston road, Derby

Hon. Secretary—Miss Wilkinson, 37 Gerard street, Derby, and four members serving each two years: 1895, Mrs. R. W. Gentles, Mrs. C. S. Buchanan, Mrs. E. S. Johnson.

This association is unsectarian.

The annual meeting is held in January when the report is published of the year the previous December; 378 girls and women were assisted in 1894; expenses £724.

Means are urgently required to extend and develop both the Preventive and Rescue Agencies; either can be helped exclusively.

The Institute was founded in 1825, and first occupied a schoolroom in the town. In 1832, under the presidency of the late Joseph Strutt, Esq., a commodious house in the Wardwick was obtained, and adapted for a library, reading, and other rooms. On the adjoining land a large hall was erected, the total cost (about £3,500) being raised partly by public subscription and partly by an exhibition of works of art and industry held in 1839. The institution continued its useful work till about the year 1880, when the building was demolished to widen the Wardwick. The present handsome building, which occupies a portion of the site, comprises a lofty reading-room, well stocked with newspapers, magazines, reviews, and other current literature; a chess and smoking-room, several classrooms, and a large room for lectures and meetings. The library contains about 7,000 volumes. The Albert Hall, recently remodelled, is a spacious and elegant room, in the Grecian style, 75 feet by 40 wide, and 35 high, well adapted for public concerts, entertainments, balls, &c.

THE LEADING NEWSPAPER IN DERBYSHIRE.

The Derbyshire Advertiser

(Published on Friday and Saturday. Price, One Penny.)

Is the Leading Weekly Newspaper, and the Best Advertising Medium in the County of Derby. For fifty years The Advertiser has maintained a high reputation as a First-class County Newspaper; and, as its advertisement columns demonstrate, has won the confidence of the professional and commercial classes to a greater extent than any other newspaper published in the County. The Derbyshire Advertiser is a specially valuable advertising medium for solicitors', auctioneers', and land agents' advertisements, of which it has a large number weekly. For trade advertisements, as well as hotel notices, &c., it is far away the best advertising medium in the County, and advertisers of all classes find it most profitable to avail themselves of the facilities it offers for giving publicity to their announcements over an exceedingly wide and populous area, comprising the County of Derby, the important district of North Staffordshire, and large portions of the adjoining counties. Quotations for serial advertisements, as well as all other information, can be readily obtained at the Head Office, Market Place, DERBY,

OR AT THE

Branch Offices at ASHBOURN and BAKEWELL.

The Largest Circulation of any Newspaper in Derbyshire.

No Advertisement can be effectively brought under the notice of the Inhabitants of this important district unless it appears in the columns of Chesterfield Herald, and General Advertiser for the Counties of Derby, Nottingham, South Yorkshire, East Cheshire, and North Stafford.

The Derbyshire Times,

Established January 7th, 1854. Enlarged by 7½ columns September 6th, 1890. Again enlarged June, 1892.

The above Journal is the Great Advertising Medium for the above Counties. It is published Wednesday and Saturday, the size being Eight Pages; Sixty-four Long Columns, Price One Penny (on Wednesdays, One Half-penny), and its circulation upwards of 15,000 copies weekly, confirmation of which fact can be obtained by enquiry of the Newsagents.

"THE DERBYSHIRE TIMES" was especially selected by the Magistrates in Quarter Sessions assembled as a medium for the County Advertisements. The County Council also made a similar choice.

"THE DERBYSHIRE TIMES," some time ago, published Certificates from Newsagents as to its Circulation, the originals of which can be seen on application at the Office. The average return showed a CIRCULATION THREEFOLD THAT OF ANY OTHER DERBYSHIRE NEWSPAPER.

STOKE HALL STONE QUARRIES

Wm DERBYSHIRE

 THE Proprietor of this well known (warm brown) Sandstone is now by the completion of the Dore and Chinley Railway, on the M system, to despatch it from Grindleford Station to all parts, on most favourable terms.

The great durability, even texture, and warm colour of this stone, combined with its facility in working, render it especially suitable for buildings of important or monumental character.

It can be used with equal readiness for the largest cornice section, most refined moulding, or for figure or foliage carving.

The Cutler's Hall, at Sheffield, built with this stone, some 70 years shows no deterioration from the exceptionally severe atmospheric influence of that town.

The stone can be quarried to either random or dimension size to suit height on its natural bed, a point so often overlooked in selecting a good workable stone.

In the Sheffield new Municipal Buildings, now in course of construction with this stone, the whole of the mullions, columns, &c., are on the natural surface. This can only be accomplished in few building stones.

This stone is also being used in the construction of the new County Jail for the West Riding C.C., at Wakefield, three Banks, and many other important buildings.

Particulars as to the chemical analysis, crushing strain, tests, &c., may be obtained on application to
